An Englishman is said to be effecting cures in Australia by breathing on people. This may be true, for we have encountered people whose breath was certainly strong enough to kill a man, if it struck him twice in the same place.

Count (to his servant)—John, I have noticed that ever since your wife's death you have come home drunk every evening. Why is this? John—I am only trying to console myself for my loss. Count—And how long is this going to [illegible]? John—O, sir, I am inconsolable.

"Is my face dirty?" asked a young lady of her aunt, while at dinner at a Hartford hotel, the other day. "Dirty! No. Why do you ask?" "Because that insulting waiter insists upon putting a towel beside my plate. I've thrown three under the table, and yet every he comes round he puts another one before me."

Thousands of immigrants arriving daily in New York immediately leave for the West, and many persons wonder where they all find employment. The fact is, they merely take the places of those Western people who are blown away by frightful tornadoes.

"Is there such a thing as luck?" asks a correspondent. There is. For instance, if you go home at two o'clock in the morning, after promising your wife to be in early, and find her asleep, and don't tumble over any chairs, that's luck, but it isn't to be depended on.

Gomgom, junior, who has only been married a few days, happened, in company with his wife, to pass near a beehive. The bees stung his wife, and Gomgom, instead of pitying her, said, "How intelligent are those bees, my dear, to know that we are in our honeymoon!"

A father complained bitterly of the way his children destroyed their clothing. He said: "When I was a boy I only had one suit of clothes, and I had to take care of it. I was only allowed one pair of shoes a year in those days!" Then the oldest boy spoke up and said: "I say, dad, you have a much easier time of it now—you are living with us!"

A young lady who had been married a little over a year wrote to her father in this city, saying: "We have the dearest little cottage in the world, ornamented with the most charming little creepers you ever saw." The old man read the letter, and exclaimed, "Twins, by thunder."

The Height of Folly.

To wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, is the height of folly, when you might be easily cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known sickly families made the healthiest, by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

A Mountain Springtime in Wyoming.

Spring in all latitudes and longitudes is indeed a delightful season. It is more especially so here near the place where Winter is stored up for use almost the entire year. Here in the neighborhood where the remains of Sir John Franklin were found, here where a man has to wear a seal-skin cap with ear muffs, on the Fourth of July, Spring, gentle Spring, is more heartily welcomed than elsewhere.

All nature is glad at this season of the year and at this elevation. The sociable little cactus comes forth in the gulches, while in its bosom the bud is swelling which in June will come in its tropical brightness, meek little cactus, emblem of a reluctant Spring. Coy and shy, modest and reserved at times, let not the fresh and gentle stranger undertake to crush them with his person.

Spring in this torrid clime reaches us about June, and even at that time seems uncertain and lacks that decision of character which marks the season farther away from the open polar sea than we are.

It is at this season that the mountain streams are turned into the irrigating canals and go laughing down the green-fringed ditches of the town, kissing the oyster can and with a gurgle of satisfaction dallying with the stiffened remains of the holiday corset.

Out in the sun-kissed hills and over the mellow distance where the gray sky lingers lovingly on the mountains, the graceful little cottontail is bounding [illegible] beyond him the eye catches the swift yet noiseless movement of the coyote. In a moment the cottontail and the coyote will have melted into each other like a beautiful dream, and the coyote will be on the outside.

In the greenish-gray foreground of this beautiful picture, underneath the protecting boughs of the sagebrush, the sagehen is laying her eggs. We will not disturb her thoughts. The intellectual strain which it requires to lay an egg should not be harshly broken in upon by the careless and thoughtless worldling.

Across the stretch of level plain and the green divide, the Summer zephyr is sighing, and on its heaving bosom it is bearing the seductive odor of the sand lily, the alkali buffalo willow and the deceased Texan steer.

Spring, sweet-scented advance agent of Summer, you are once more among us. Beautiful Spring has come.—Bill Nye's Boomerang.

A Moral Lesson?

I was at a benefit performance one evening last week, and sat in one of the stage boxes with three other men. One of the number is a little too fond of the flowing bowl. His friends know it, and never miss an opportunity to inculcate moral lessons into him.

On this evening it so happened that an immense black cat appeared at the wing, where it was visible to us in the box, but not to the audience. In the shadow of the scenery, with its great green eyes snapping from out the dark, it was indeed a gruesome object.

"Look!" muttered Bibulus, "look at that cat!"

We all exchanged a look of of intelligence.

"Cat?" said one, "what cat? where?"

"Why there," replied Bibulus, "right at the wing."

"Nor I," added the first.

Bibulus glanced around uneasily upon us. There was an expression of compassionate interest on every man's face.

"Zulano," he muttered, hoarsely, clutching my arm, "do you mean to tell me you do not see a cat there—a black cat?"

"Come, come, Bibulus," I replied, "if this is a jest it is a sorry one. There is no cat there, and you know it."

Bibulus turned pale, rose, and quitted the box. We were all congratulating ourselves on having scared him into temperance for a while, when it occurred to me that I would follow him to see where he had gone.

I tracked him to the bar. When I entered he was just taking a glass of brandy to settle his nerves.

It was three fingers full.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Strange Sight.

The south-bound freight train on the North Carolina railroad ran over a negro child about 4 years old, between the Yadkin river bridge and Salisbury, recently. The engineer saw it would be impossible to stop the train before it reached the spot where the child was sitting, and, swinging himself out of the window, started to crawl along the engine to its front, with the intention of picking up the child before the cow-catcher struck it. He would probably have succeeded in this perilous undertaking, but a lunge of the engine caused him to lose his balance, and he was precipitated down an embankment. He had hardly regained his feet before a piercing scream was heard, and he knew the child had been run down. The engine stopped within its length after striking the child, and then the horrible task of pulling the mangled body out from under the wheels began. The body had been cut half in two as cleanly as if done with a knife, the head part falling to one side and the legs to the other. A shudder ran through the engineer when he picked up the head and body of the child, and the sensations he experienced when it broke into a cry were indescribable. He hastily laid it upon the ground, when it uttered the most agonizing screams for full two minutes before it gave a grasp and died. It was a strange experience to hear a dismembered body crying, and was well calculated to make the witnesses shudder. The body of the child was turned over to its mother, who lived in a cabin near by.—Charlotte Observer.

THE Deerfield schools seem to be a close corporation. Out of five teachers three of them are members of the Edgecumbe family.

It is estimated that the wheat crop of the United States this year will reach 500,000,000 bushels. One-half of this amount will be required for home consumption. What will become of the other half? If the complications in Europe continue, and the crops on the continent turn out poor there may be a market for this surplus, but it will not do to place too much dependence upon these contingencies.

Congress could not find time to revise the tariff and thus relieve the people of some of the burdens of taxation imposed upon them, but it could create a commission to investigate the question and thus delay a tariff revision for two years to come. Here are the taxes on a few articles which people can pay two years longer just as well as not:

	Per Cent.
Cleaned rice, subject to a duty of	105
Uncleaned rice	85
Spool thread	78½
Common window glass	75
Anchors (for our flourishing shipping trade)	88⅞
Cables and chains do	74½
Wrought iron tubes and flues, to keep our dwellings healthy	82⅝
Back-saws, for carpenters to make a living	63¾
Castor oil (used by the sick)	83¾
Castor oil "	115
Whiting (used for the houses of the poor and their barns)	253
Salt	64
Common soap	46
Starch made of rice	119
Raw sugar	57
Sugar No. 16, fit for table use	70
Common drugget, costing 40c. a yard	96
Common woolen dress goods, costing abroad 17c. a square yard	69¾
Common woolen blankets, costing 54c. per lb.	90½
Flannel, costing 41c. a yard	102½
Woolen hosiery	89
Wool hats	96

On many woolen goods the duties are so high as to be prohibitory. The House passed a relief bill which abolished the tax on cosmetics and perfumery, hair dyes and patent medicines, and reduced the tax on cigars and cigarettes, and the licenses of saloon keepers. How generous to relieve the poor perfumery and patent medicine nabobs of their burdens and "ease up" on the cigar maker and whisky seller. But the people at large can stand the taxes levied in the above table, and so they are suffered to remain or to await the report of the tariff commission.

After an eight months' session Congress has finally closed its doors and gone home. In general legislation little has been done. The Bankruptcy bill lies unpassed, as also the bill for the relief of the Supreme Court. The tariff has been turned over to the tender mercies of a commission, which, like the country jury, whose members all had a "slice of the pork," will be expected to return a verdict of not guilty. The Bank Charter Extension Act has been passed, but congress was driven into this by the business necessities of the country. The Nation in commenting upon the work of Congress aptly says: "But congress has not been idle; on the contrary it has been very busy. It has done more business than any legislative body in the United States for many years.—The expenditures for the fiscal year ending with June, 1883, excluding principal and interest of the public debt are fixed at $294,513,639. The increase over last year's outlay is a little less than $78,000,990 and over that of the year before over $100,000,000. The River and Harbor bill, (called by some irreverent Yankee the Duck Puddle bill,) has grown from $11,000,000 to over $18,000,000. Other regular appropriation bills show an increase in the following fashion over those of last year:

Army	$ 570,200
Legislative, etc,	2,076,312
Sundry Civil	2,062,992
Indians	829,134
Military Academy	11,565
Post-office	3,686,468
Consular	65,220

Not only has the main work of the session been the increase of appropriations, but it has been done in a peculiarly barefaced way, and with a defiance of public opinion more like what used to go on at Albany during the Tweed ring than anything that has been hitherto seen at Washington. The River and Harbor Bill was on its face such a huge job, that no public defense of it has been attempted, and the Naval bill was put in charge of a man notorious all over the country for his maladministration of the Navy Department.

Purple, violet, gold and white,
Royal clouds are they;
Catching the spear-like rays in the west,

Ships rigged out with sails of fire
And flown by the evening air.
—J. K. HOYT.

Monday, July 11th.—Columbus cultivated corn, Ellic plastered and hoed potatoes. Sold a calf to Joe Gooding for veal. Got $5.00 for the calf. Upon figuring up the expense of fatting the calf I found it had consumed $6.00 worth of middlings besides the milk it drank. I charged the middlings to the dairy account and credited the $5.00 to the calf account, which gave me a clean net profit of $5.00 on the calf. I have two more calves which I shall dispose of in the same way. From present indications, I shall make more money this season out of my calf crop than from any other crop on the farm.

Tuesday, July 12th.—Columbus cultivated corn to-day. He ran against a concealed stump and broke one tooth off the cultivator. When the cultivator struck the stump and stopped, Ichabod went right on and landed head first [illegible] horse took fright and started down the row at a two-forty gait with the cultivator behind him, and Ichabod under the cultivator. It was a rough and tumble race for a few rods. When Columbus picked himself up, one boot was missing, his hat was gone, a plump square inch of bark was taken from the end of his nose, his left collar bone was cracked, and his false teeth were ground into forty pieces. He managed to get to the house alone, when his wife administered a little Eureka Salve, gave him some hot ginger tea, and put him to bed. Ellic found the horse about an hour afterwards in neighbor Gilson's truck patch, quietly trimming the cabbage heads. Ellic hoed the potatoes and hunted up the horse.

Wednesday, July 13th.—Columbus was indisposed to-day. Ellic got the horses shod and went for a load of wood. He picked peas for market. Mrs. Columbus fixed up a mess of green peas for Ichabod's supper, which greatly revived him, and he expects to oversee the work to-morrow.

Thursday, July 14th.—Columbus felt so much better that he went into the three acre bay field. After cutting about two hours one wheel of the mower struck a stone and broke the axle-tree square in two. He took it to the Foundry to have a new axle put in. It will take one day and a five dollar bill to do the job, which is getting off pretty cheap. In the afternoon the men raked up the hay cut in the morning and Ellic picked a bushel of peas. I am much pleased with the way the pea crop is panning out. Have already sold three bushels at fifty cents a bushel, and the crop is'nt more than half harvested. Ellic can pick two bushels a day, besides waiting on Columbus and doing the chores, and as his wages are paid from the expense account, the receipts for peas help pay Ichabod's grocery bills.

Friday, July 15th.—Columbus got the mowing machine from the foundry and cut the rest of the grass in the three acre lot. Ellic picked another bushel of peas and turned hay in the afternoon. In order to get the hay all in before Sunday I engaged Geo. Marshall to help to-morrow. George has only one fault; he will pull his moustache while Columbus is asking grace at the table. Although this shocks Ichabod's religious feelings, it doesn't seem to incapacitate George for pitching hay.

Saturday, July 11th.—Columbus, Ellic and Marshall got an early start to rake and draw in the hay. Ichabod had planned the work admirably. They were to rake hay from 7 to 9 A. M.; bunch it up from 9 to 11; between 11 and 12 A. M. they would turn the bunches bottom side up; and from 1 to 6 P. M. they would draw it in. The program was carried out, exactly as planned, until noon. While at dinner a terrific thunder storm came up, and for two hours the rain came down in sheets. Every person in the house was kept busy holding in the windows, keeping the doors on the hinges and carrying water out of the cellar. The front yard was converted into a duck-pond; the green peas were washed into the street; most of the hay, which was ready to draw before dinner, was swimming down the big creek into the river Raisin. Upon going out after dinner, the boys found the chicken coops swimming around in the back yard; the green phaeton, which stood in front of the barn, was in the next field bottom side up; twenty rods of lane fence was blown flat, and the hogs were hoeing out the cabbage patch; ten young turkeys and a dozen ducklings which Mrs. Columbus had been raising for her own pocket money, were completely drowned, and the old hens escaped only because they could fly into the corn crib; all the empty barrels on the farm, together with several forks and rakes, the garden hoes, two new horse blankets and sundry other articles of personal property were found distributed over neighbor Dutton's wheat field on the next farm south. The boys spent the balance of the afternoon collecting the fragments and making a boat to navigate the barnyard with. When Ichabod brought in the milk that night he took off his waterproof overcoat, pulled his rubber boots, rung the water out of his straw hat and exclaimed: "I tell you what, young man, I began to think that the second comin' of Noah had arrived. I've seen a good many terrific storms over'n Canada, but I never seen one afore that washed out a crop o' peas. Something has been did or left undone to bring this calamity upon us. As long as Marshall persists in interruptin' the blessing at table by pullin' his moustache, something awful is sure to happen. I've remonstrated with him, scolded him, and coaxed him, all to no purpose. This morning at breakfast George and the baby joined hands to break up grace, the latter drummin' a tattoo on its plate with a spoon. I knew then that some awful calamity would happen before night. You must hire some other man or George must give bonds to keep his fingers off his moustache durin' prayer time."

Rumbling, tumbling, tearing away
The rain comes down in sheets.
Old Noah himself, if he were here,
Would have hard work his ark to steer,
For rivers run in the streets.

The weather bureau clerk is drunk,
Vennor is on a tear.
The pea crop's washed into the ditch
While barrels, blankets, rakes and sich
Go sailing through the air.

On Thursday, Aug. 17, 1882, leaving Adrian at 8 o'clock precisely, in the morning, and arriving back at 9 o'clock in the evening, by way of the Dundee branch of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway.

The beautiful and swift-going steamers Ariel and Fortune have been engaged to take excursionists from Wyandotte to Detroit and return, a lovely sail of about 12 miles. Excursionists who go through will have five or six hours' time to visit the attractions of Detroit.

At Wyandotte the visitors will be enabled to see the big ship yard, silver works and mammoth rolling mills, while the place offers many attractions for pleasure parties and picnickers, with its fine hotels, mineral spring, etc. Steamboats make regular trips between Wyandotte and Detroit.

This will be one of the most novel trips, as well as the cheapest and pleasantest ever planned from this section.

The excursion train will stop at the following places, the time given being the hour for leaving in the morning: Lenawee Junction, 8:10; Wellsville, 8:26; Sissons, 8:31; Deerfield, 8:39; Petersburg, 8:46; Dundee, 8:55; Maybee, 9:16; Carlton, 9:35; Flat Rock, 9:50.

Passengers from Clayton, Hudson and other points west, can purchase round trip tickets, and connect with the excursion at Adrian by the morning train, getting back on the regular passenger train in the evening. Passengers from the Fayette and Jackson branches can do the same, connecting with the excursion at Lenawee Junction, and arriving home on the regular train in the evening.

Refreshments will be served on the steamers by a leading caterer of Detroit, at reasonable prices. A day of cheap pleasure for everybody. Persons desiring further information may obtain it of their local station agents, or by addressing J. H. Blain or H. H. Osgood, Managers, Adrian.

Mr. Walter McPherson, Springfield, Mass., writes: "I have been peculiarly unfortunate in life. My guardian robbed me of the fortune left me by my father, and at the age of 21 I found myself poor in purse and poor in health. I married a young girl whose health soon broke down from overwork and household cares. Our six children gave her great trouble, and were very puny and sickly. My doctor bills were larger than both grocery and dry goods bills together. Last year I brought home a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters for my wife.—She used it and gave it to the children—I also used it myself. Never did I imagine such a miraculous change from ill health to perfect health possible.

Hon. T. F. Moore publishes a card, in the Adrian Record in which he announces his formal withdrawal from the Republican party. He says:

I observed in a recent issue of your paper, that I have been mentioned by a Washtenaw paper, as one of the citizens of Lenawee county, whose name will be before the coming republican convention a candidate for the nomination. Such an assumption is utterly without foundation, as I neither desire, nor would I accept a nomination by the convention referred to, even if such nomination were unanimously tendered. To become a party candidate for any office of importance, the nominee should be in the fullest accord with the living principles and policy of the party nominating him. If the principles and policy of a party antagonize the welfare of the masses, and the party is conducted in the interest of monopolies, it is my duty as a good citizen to oppose such principles and policy. As I view the present attitude of the republican party, affecting the only real issues that concern the people I could not, in justice to my convictions, assent to its course.

I am fully aware that this card was not needed to prevent my nomination. There was no danger of that. I simply desire that no one shall be led into any error concerning me.

Very Respectfully,
T. F. MOORE.

"Promptly and Entirely."

Kills the Pleasure.

Illness in the house affects the whole family in some manner. When the sickness is serious the children's laughter must be hushed, footsteps must be softened, all goes sadly and wrong.—Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" stands in your doorway and says to sickness: "keep out!" It will cost you only a Dollar to put the sentinel on duty, and for his faithfulness thousands can vouch. Ask your druggist, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

THE Evening News gives this description of the camp ground at Island Lake:

Island Lake, the place selected for the encampment of the state militia, is two miles from the village of Brighton and 40 miles from Detroit, on the D., L. & N. R. R. It is a beautiful sheet of water, very clear and free from weeds, and with sloping, sandy bottom, and high, wooded banks. It is also the center one of three beautiful lakes, separated only by a few yards, all of them abounding in fish. The railroad skirts the southern shore, where a side track has been laid for the benefit of the soldiers and visitors, and near the northern shore is the Detroit and Howell gravel road, furnishing a beautiful drive from Detroit. It is also easily reached from all parts of the state, by Flint & Pere Marquette railroad to Plymouth, by Toledo and Ann Arbor to South Lyons, thence direct to the lake, or from north, west or southwest via. Lansing. Recent indications point to a successful and pleasant encampment.

GEO. L. GRAVES, of Milwaukee, landed in Tecumseh Saturday last and remained till Monday evening.—His visits are always short, as a good many friends claim his time while here, but they are none the less happy to see him.

Hudson Gazette: Runaways can happen on the farm as well as in town. Last week while J. S. Williams, of Wheatland, was cutting wheat with a reaper, his team took fright at the breaking of some part of the harness, and dashed away, smashing the drive-wheel and otherwise damaging the machine.

Taking it leisurely until they reached Hermit lake, they lunched, and then pushed on rapidly to the snow arch. National Relief & Accident Association.

Tecumseh, Aug 7th, 1882.

S. C. Stacy, Editor Tecumseh Herald:

Dear Sir:—As you are a member of and have taken quite an interest in the advancement of the National Relief and Accident Association I wish to inform you that we have met with the first death loss which we paid within two weeks after proof of death was received and accepted, and for which we have the following receipt.

Tecumseh, Mich., July 28th, 1882.

This is to certify that I have this day received of the National Relief and Accident Association my entire claim against the said Association on the certificate of Jemima Laut, deceased, of Portland, Mich.

JAMES S. DECKER.

We have just paid another loss in the Accident Division, to Mr. Sevillian Hendershot of Macon, and he says:

Tecumseh, Mich., Aug 7th, 1882.

Received of the National Relief and Accident Association Forty dollars, payment in full of my claim for an accident which happened to me June 30th. I was assisting at a barn-raising and broke my arm which laid me up four weeks. I am pleased with the promptness your company has shown in paying my loss.

SEVILLIA HENDERSHOT.

Our motto is safe, prompt and cheap. It is now over eight months since the Association was organized and this is the first death. This experience speaks volumes for the care used by the N. R. & A. A. in the selection of its members.

We do but one kind of business and that is furnishing honest, legitimate, straight, indemnity at actual cost. We have no "schemes" or "endowments" to shorten its life or swindle its members. Our plan has been examined by insurance men and pronounced the best they have seen.

Hoping you will continue to manifest the same interest in the Association you ever have, I am

Yours Truly,
C. A. SLAYTON, Sec'y.

DR. HAUSE has just received a large invoice of new teas. He has a full assortment of all the various brands which the tea-lover of this latitude can desire. In Japan teas he has the the best brand ever brought into this market, which he obtained directly from the importer, and which he can sell at a very reasonable figure. He makes a specialty of his 75 cent Japan tea and has a good Japan which he can retail at 50 cents.

Hudson Post: Wm. Scout, of Adrian, a windmill agent, got into a bad breeze Wednesday afternoon. He had been full of "old Bentley" all day, and going into a house on South Main street, presuming on a slight acquaintance, committed an entirely unwarranted assault upon a young married lady, her husband being absent. She indignantly repelled him and was about to brain him with a chair when he incontinently fled.—The officers are on his track.

TELEPHONE TALK.

"Want to buy a mule?" queried a farmer of a country editor. "No; what the deuce do I want of a mule?" asked the astonished paste manipulator. "Well," rejoined the stranger, "I seed an item in your paper last week which said that you wished folks wouldn't talk to you so much through your telly fome, as you had only one pair of ears; so I thought I'd fetch down another pair and then you'd have a team." When the farmer got outside and dug the paste out of his left ear he felt thankful that he wasn't a mule.

THE SOLDIERS' REUNION.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Association of Southwestern Michigan will hold its fourth annual encampment at Three Rivers, Aug. 23d, 24th and 25th, and all surviving soldiers and sailors of the late war, residing in Southwestern Michigan and Northern Indiana, are cordially invited to enroll themselves on the camp roster and participate in the reunion. The patriotic citizens of Three Rivers and vicinity will furnish free rations and, in accordance with a concurrent resolution of the Legislature, the State will provide camp equipage, while reduced fare on the railroads will leave no excuse for non-attendance to any veteran who desires to meet again his comrades of the days of trial and triumph. Prominent among the new features this year will be the dress parade, march to the cemetery and honors to dead comrades on the afternoon of the 23d, and the "camp fires" each evening, at which some of the best speakers in the State will be heard. The formal public exercises will occur on the 24th, but no day will be devoid of interest either to the soldier or civilian.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, our pastor, Rev. C. C. Sink, has felt it his duty to resign his pastorate with the Christian church at Ridgeway, Mich., and

Whereas, our said brother has served us as a faithful shepherd and with great acceptability during the past year, and

Whereas, we deeply regret the seperation so soon to occur between us, be it therefore

Resolved, That our beloved brother and his family bear with them our heartfelt love and our prayers for their prosperity in their high and sacred calling.

Resolved, That we have the fullest confidence in Brother Sink as a devout christian minister, and willingly and cheerfully recommend him to any church or people as a christian gentleman and a minister of fine literary and theological attainments, a good orator and a faithful pastor.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing preambles and resolutions be forwarded to the Herald of Gospel Liberty and to the Tecumseh HERALD for publication.

Done by order of the Christian church at Ridgeway, Mich., the 6th day of August, 1882.

Change in Mail Route.

We have received from Willis Merritt a copy of an order dated Aug 1st, which will convey welcome intelligence to the good people of Macon.—Under the new arrangement Macon will get a daily mail from Tecumseh, and Ridgeway also, the same as heretofore. The carrier instead of going to Ridgeway and Lake Ridge and returning by the same route, will go first to Macon, (Pennington's corners,) thence to Lake Ridge, thence to Ridgeway, then return to Tecumseh. The people who are benefitted by this change are indebted to Mr. Edwin Willetts and Judge Howell for valuable assistance rendered by them in bringing it about:

Bonanza Mackey's London Hotel.

Recently the bonanza king, Mr. Mackey, was staying at the boasted excelsior hotel of London, "the Grand Central of Charing Cross," and his coming to his establishment created a perfect furor from directors down to "Boots." Fearing the usual style of bed-room would not suit the purse-prince, the manager had a partition wall of the largest dormitory pulled down and suitably decorated. Thus a superb large bed-room and an adjunct thereto were in readiness for the renowned purse-bearer. Everything else went on in a similar style of extended and exclusive attendance to the financial hero. At the end of the fourth day Mr. Mackey called for his bill and indicated his departure. The bill came and was scanned closely and items objected to. But they were paid, for no European hotel-keeper "harks back" in these matters, knowing full well, the objection is sufficient to prevent a revisit and the rebate would be a dead loss. The bill was fully paid. Then came the servants for their balm of Paradise — "tips." Mr. Mackey proudly went along the soft-carpeted corridor and gave the vassals—one shilling—25 cents! Then the wrath of all hoteldom was up. Five days after this prince of purses telegraphed from Paris for rooms in the same hotel. He was answered by a curt telegram, saying merely "All full." Then his wrath also was aroused, and he vowed he would build a hotel in London large enough to accommodate six thousand persons, and swamp all the "Grands"—Central, Northern, Southern, and Western! And so far he has only spoken in his wrath. But that an American hotel in every way worthy of the name of "Grand" is to be built in London there is no doubt. The site is chosen on the Thames embankment rear ground, and a few hundred yards east of the Charing Cross Metropolitan railway station.

This hotel is spoken of as something that will astonish John Bull, even in his most domestic nil admirari moments. It is manifest that the American tourist of this age is becoming an epicurean hunter after a bon bouche that arises above pork and beans, for of all growlers over Great Britain's defective dishes there are none so loud and so long as the young men from Connecticut and Coney island, who carry boldly their parental trademarks of milk and pie, dyspepsia and doughnuts, and are the majority of our mouthy modern American tourists in Europe, who fail to live on Michael Angelos, Titians, Rafaels, Rubens, royalty, and what they poetically style "rot" in designating a dish not patented by Delmonico. What the new American hotel in London will be, no man in his wisdom dare predict, for there is just this difference between England and the United States—that they are two nations and two peoples, and ever will be—all the kith-and-kin sentiments to the contrary notwithstanding.—London Letter.

How Long Bees Live.

I thought I would satisfy myself in regard to the life of the bee in the height of the working season. I had a stand of little black bees of the genuine stingers, and on the morning of May 30 I killed the queen, and by carefully looking through their hive I found one black drone and destroyed that in the evening of the same day. I put in a cell for a queen. She was hatched out, and there were a few yellow bees in the hive on the 30th, in just twenty-one days from the time the eggs were deposited. On July 7, a few yellow bees were to be seen playing around the hive, and on the thirteenth day of July, just fourteen days from the time the yellow bees were hatched out, a few were seen at work with the black bees. Now any one can see that if the yellow bees hatched in twenty-one days, the last black bees were all out by the thirtieth of June, and if the yellow bees went to work on the twelfth of July, the last of the black bees must have gone to work on the fourth of July, making fourteen days from the time they were hatched, unless one will go to work sooner than the other. This stand contained nothing but black bees when the black queen was destroyed on the eighteenth of July, just forty-nine days from the time the black queen was destroyed; there was not a black bee to be seen about the hive. I opened it. Not one was to be seen inside. Now I know that bees will live longer at any other season of the year, and thought this would be a good chance to test the height of the working season. The hive was examined every day during the whole time, so that no mistake might be made. From this it will be seen that the lifetime of a honey-bee, in the busiest working season, is but four weeks or twenty-eight days.

Breaches of Etiquette at Court.

There is a story going round in civic circles to the effect that a lady, distinguished in that social world of which the Mansion house is the center, committed a strange and most inexcusable breach of etiquette, on the occasion of the recent visit of the queen to Epping forest. The lady had to make a small presentation to her majesty, and instead of kissing the royal hand, she shook it vigorously! I never heard of but one other person who made a similar mistake, and that was a young student of Trinity college, Dublin,—now the staid vicar of a parish in Cheshire,—whom nervousness overcame when he was first introduced to the presence of royalty. Hudson, we know, once offered his arm to the queen, but her majesty, thinking, doubtless, that the "railway king" had matters on his mind more important than court etiquette, accepted it with smiling grace.—London World.

A singular and [illegible] was produced, [illegible] by a gentleman in the stalls [illegible] his bald head instead of clapping his hands. It sounded very odd. No doubt it will become the fashion, as so many of our pilt youth have a great deficiency in this part (of course, of hair).—Court Journal.

Man's Relation to the Lower Animals.

Since many writers opposed to the practice of experiments on animals have based their objections entirely on moral grounds, and thus made the question of vivisection an ethical one, I have been anxious to know what laws they have discovered for our guidance on this vexed subject. They discourse on cruelty, on immorality and on the rights of animals; but these expressions are savage that they fail to afford any basis for legal or public action, or, if there be any attempt at definition, it is with the object of making these terms conform on the very point under discussion. Thus it is constantly asserted that physiologists feel at liberty to torture animals at their pleasure, without regard to the "higher dictates of humanity." It is thus implied that there exists among the public some principle of conduct toward the lower animals which has no place among experimenters. They speak as if, standing on a higher platform, and recognizing all creatures from a superior position, they could frame a code of laws which should have due regard to the rights of animals, and govern our own conduct in all our relations to them.—This position is altogether fallacious; man cannot disconnect himself from the animal world, and cannot define its rights. It must, therefore, be abandoned as altogether untenable, and the subject discussed from a totally different stand-point. Our relation to the animal world can only in a very qualified sense be regarded from an ethical point of view; much in the same way as eating and drinking may be spoken of as questions of morality when moral considerations exert their influence over the amount and kind of food which we consume; this, however, can not hide from us the fact that the subject of digestion is fundamentally a physiological one.

The duty of man toward animals, as an abstract question, is from its very nature insoluble; it can only be partially answered on the grounds of expediency, and these will vary according to age and nation. We should, rather, ask what is our relation to the lower animal world, and in what place in that relationship can moral considerations come into force? In endeavoring to form a judgment of this relationship, we must take facts as we find them, for the attempt at an explanation is trying to solve the riddle of our existence, and leaves us still with "the burden of the mystery of all this unintelligible world."—From "The Ethics of Vivisection," by Dr. Samuel Wilks, in Popular Science Monthly.

Music as a Mental Discipline.

The nature of music is threefold, like that of man to whom it appeals. Therefore, it may be regarded as a sensuous art, in that it delights the ear; as a psychological art, in that it records the emotions, and requires mental operations on the part of the hearer for its due appreciation; and, as it involves agreements, differences, symmetries, complexities, etc., and order in apparent disorder, it may be regarded as a branch of science closely allied to mathematics.

The distances between the holes of a flute, the tension of a drum-head, the lengths of organ-pipes, the rapidity of vibrations, the intervals between recurring accents—in fact, all that may be surveyed and expressed in numbers in [illegible] power of the musician, irrespective of all considerations respecting the imagination or creative power in originating composition.

The music of a people may be considered in direct relation to their supersensuous natures. From this point alone, strongly marked differences may be noted; for, by comparing modern Italian music with German, it is at once seen that the latter is developed more highly in an intellectual sense.

Our modern music is styled a new art, chiefly because it requires advanced mental powers of a special kind on the part of composers and auditors. Instead of being a succession of monotones, it is a complex web of many tones, that the hearer must analyze to understand and enjoy. In the ordinary church quartette there are four such interwoven threads; in a symphony by Beethoven, many more. An elaborate tonal plexus demands from the listener considerable mental effort, unless he has acquired by study a "polyphonic ear," or the power of perceiving the relationships of all the parts heard simultaneously as clearly as one looking down upon a ball-room scene may perceive the symmetrical forms of a mazy dance.—Dr. S. Austen Pearce, in Popular Science Monthly for July.

Mosquitoes and Elephants.

Thick as an elephant's skin, no living creature suffers more from flies, mosquitoes, leeches, and other vermin, than he. The pores are very large, and gadflies and mosquitoes, &c., worm themselves into the hollow, and suck to repletion. Thus the whole day long they are constantly throwing up dirt, squirting saliva or water, to get rid of these pests, to the great annoyance of their riders. They snore a good deal when asleep, and I have often seen them resting their heads on an outstretched foot when lying down. They are very human-like in many of their ways. They get a piece of wood and use it as a toothpick. They scratch themselves with the tip of their proboscis, and if they cannot reach the place with that, they take up a branch and use that. Natives say they plug up bullet holes with clay, but I never knew in an instance of it myself.—The London Field.

Eloquent But Unavailing.

A man dressed in sailor costume was up before a country court the other day upon a charge of stealing a pair of boots. As he had no counsel the court appointed a young lawyer to take charge of the defense. The lawyer opened the case with a speech, in which he alluded to his client as "a child of the sad sea waves, a nursling of the storm, whom the pitiless billows had cast, a forlorn and friendless waif, upon the shore of time, after a life spent in fierce and heroic contests with the raging elements." Then the defendent was put in the dock, and the fact was revealed that he was cook upon a canal boat, previous to which he had hawked fish. The "nursling of the storm" is now in jail for six months.—Philadelphia Press.

Ugliness as a Peacemaker.

A writer in the New York Ledger tells a good story about the duelists who were made friends by their homely faces:

Monsieur de Langerie and M. de Mortande were both noted for their ugliness of face. From some cause, De Montande challenged the other to fight a duel, which challenge was promptly accepted; time and place appointed, and weapons named.

Arrived upon the grounds, and ready for the combat,—swords had been the weapons chosen,—M. de Langerie had looked sharply into his antagonist's face, and started back a pace, at the same time dropping the point of his sword.

"Upon my honor, monsieur, I cannot fight with you!"

"How!" cried the other, in amazement. "Not fight! Are you in earnest?"

"I am. I cannot fight you."

"You insult me anew, monsieur. You have accepted my challenge, and now you refuse me satisfaction."

"No, I will not refuse you satisfaction. I would rather ask your pardon than fight you."

"But, monsieur, what means it? Why are you unwilling to fight me?"

"Ah! you will be offended if I tell you."

"I will not. I swear it!"

"Well, then, the reason is this: I believe I am by far the better swordsman of the two; and if we fight, you will be [illegible] leave me ugliest-looking man in the kingdom."

De Montande appreciated the point, and burst into a hearty laugh; whereupon they shook hands and remained fast friends ever after.

Food for Heifer Calves.

In growing heifer calves for the dairy, the important thing to accomplish is to grow the frame and muscular system, without laying on much fat. It is a rangy, well-developed animal, with a vigorous digestion, that is wanted in the milch cow. The profitable milch cow must be a large eater, and make the best use of her food, in order to produce a large yield of milk. In rearing the heifer, then, she should be so fed as to give her a full development of all the vital organs, and this will necessarily bring her digestive organs into special activity.

Fat in the animal body seems only designed to serve as a cushion to the tendons and joints, to fill up and round out depressions, and, lastly, as a reserve of fuel to keep up animal heat in case of necessity. It is not the seat of any sensation, has little or nothing to do with the vital processes, and generally is merely inert ballast in the body. The food given, then, should not be designed to lay on fat—food containing an excessive amount of starch or oil should be avoided in feeding heifer calves designed for the dairy—but food rich in albuminoids and the mineral constituents of the body, is what should be sought.—National Live-Stock Journal, Chicago.

A PLEASANT LETTER.

It Rings of a Grateful Heart and Gives Honor Where Honor is Due.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced everything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote and says: "I have had no pain for six months and I have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your Liver disordered? Have you Derangement of the Kidneys or Bladder, associated with Constipation of the Bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices Medicine and Surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. About Wigs.

"Wigs cost all the way from $10 to $100, according to the fineness of the hair and the excellence of the workmanship. The most costly wigs are made on a foundation of hair lace. This kind is called the ventilated wig. You can part it anywhere like natural hair, and the appearance of the parting will be like that selected, and knotted to a mesh of the lace. The flesh shows through the meshes of the lace with great naturalness. That is the kind of a wig the blonde young man wore.—Cheaper wigs are made by fastening hair to long threads and sewing strips of it on a foundation less costly than hair lace. Even these cannot be detected by the ordinary observer, although when you know that a man wears such a wig you are sure to notice it. Very often, however, toupees are put on with so much skill by mixing the ends with the natural hair that the art is not perceptible. I think the tendency is now to conceal baldness rather than let it be seen. True, in the summer some young men get their heads clipped, like State Prison convicts or the boys in the poorhouse, but I think the fashion is less favored than formerly.

"Some experiments have been made in the direction of transplanting hair into the skin, but thus far without success. You know you may stick a pin through the outer skin without pain.—Hairs have been drawn through holes thus made, and roots of hair have been planted in the skin. But the result has been to create a little inflammation and suppuration at the point of contact of the hair with the skin. The hair lace foundation is the latest improvement, and that is fifteen years old. The cheaper foundation is called the "weft" or woven. The costliest hair is that which curls naturally. The curls may be imitated, but no respectable dealer would sell them for natural curls. The fraud would soon be discovered. There is a better opportunity in a curled wig to conceal our art. The locks may be carelessly disposed with more success than where the hair is straight. Of course I know the names of many prominent men in all the professions who wear wigs, but it is a point of honor with our profession not to reveal them. We would as soon think of betraying the name of a lady who wears puffs, braids, switch or curls of artificial manufacture.

"Many men wear wigs quite as much for their health as appearance's sake.—It has been found that bald-headed men are subject to colds, neuralgia and catarrh. A bald-headed man in an audience near a window is a nuisance.—When others want the window open to secure ventilation, he, in consideration for his bald pate, wants the window shut. If he puts on his hat nobody sees that he does it because he is bald, and he is thought unmanneriy. Some professors and doctors wear caps, but they look old, and wigs are much better.

"The market is always well supplied with all colors and shades of hair, the best of which is imported. Men don't 'wreathe their brows with well-saved combings,' as women commonly do. It would not pay men to save the combings. In men's wigs the cost of the hair is not so much as the labor. In women's wigs the hair is the costliest part."

Coy.

Charles Lamb was grieved when he saw Milton's manuscript of "L'Allegro," which is preserved at Oxford, because he found it full of corrections and erasures. He had fancied that it had come from the poet's mind almost spontaneously, instead of being hammered out. The "gentle Elia" seems not to have discovered as much of the secret of poetry as a little girl had, whose exclamation delighted the poet Longfellow:

Mr. Longfellow was one day walking in a garden with a little five years maiden, who was fond of poetry, and occasionally "made up some" herself.

"I too am fond of poetry," he said to her. "Suppose you give me a little of yours, this beautiful morning?"

"Think," cried he afterwards to a friend, throwing up his hands, his eyes sparkling with merriment, "think what her answer was. She said, 'Oh, Mr. Longfellow, it doesn't always come when you want it!' Ah me, how true! how true!"

Several months later, he was showing his little friend many things of interest in his study, and especially delighted himself at her amazement on telling her he "supposed the Ancient Mariner came out of the inkstand upon his table" (it once belonged to Coleridge); saying in a low tone, as if thinking aloud, "it doesn't always come when you want it."

Talk.

Children learn to talk the language heard about them, whether it be chaste and pure or low and vulgar. Therefore it behooves parents to take care of the manner and substance of what they say before their children, and it is also very clear that the silly, nonsensical stuff talked to children is not only very silly, but equally injurious. The conversational ability of the young is being constantly educated by the talk of others. They should be encouraged to talk. The old idea was that "children should have eyes and ears, and no tongue." The faculties cannot be cultivated in that way. Children must talk, and must be guided in their talk and conversation if they are to become expert in the use of language. Women have the faculty in a higher degree than men. They are greater talkers than men. They have stronger social feelings, which lead to the exercise of this faculty; they are in society more; they talk more to children. Women are more eloquent than men. Men are engaged in business, in thought, and depress the faculty by want of exercise; while women, by exercising the faculty, are constantly strengthening it.

Bearing Malice.

When I say one "ought not to bear malice," and then do all manner of evil to mine adversary, how shall I be able by words to win him, while by my deeds I am frightening him away! Let us catch then by our mode of life; and by their souls let us build up the church, and of these let us amass our wealth. There is nothing to weigh against a soul, not even the old world.

Shaving From House to House.

"I suppose I'm what would be called an oscillating tonsorial artist. The speaker was a well-dressed man of 30, carrying in his hand a little leather bag.

"Haven't you any shop?" asked the reporter.

"No, this is my shop," said the man, holding up his little valise. Then he opened it and showed its contents, which consisted of a dozen razors, a number of brushes, and other paraphernalia belonging to his trade. "Most of my customers live on Walnut, Spruce, and Chestnut street, said the man, "and the majority of them are rich, old gentlemen, who have retired from business, many of them who, in their younger days, shaved themselves, but have grown too infirm. I get all the way from a quarter to 75 cents for a shave. I start out every morning about 8 and wind up about 1 or 2. I have a regular route to go over," and the barber showed a little book in which were registered the addresses and names of his customers. "I have different customers for different days."

"How much can you make in a week?" queried the reporter.

"In winter I average $50 a week, but in summer I don't make so much, as many of my customers go out of town."

"Are there any barbers in your branch in any of the other large cities?"

"No, I think not. I am the only man in this particular branch. I cater to the aristocratic class, and I'm saving money at it. It's my own idea, and as a first-class artist can't make more than $20 a week in a shop, perquisites and pay, I prefer this.—Philadelphia Times.

Tipping His Wife Out.

The women of the lower and middle classes of Wales are noted for their independence, and the tenacity with which they hold to their own ways. Mr. Wirt Sykes, in his book on "Old South Wales," gives an illustration of the pertinacity with which a married woman strove to retain the reputation of being "the better man of the house."

A middle-aged and thrifty couple were of one mind as to their frugality and industry, but constantly at loggerheads as to who should be master. One evening when the domestic storm had become too severe for the husband to endure, he shut himself up in the stable in order to escape his wife's tongue.

His intention was to remain there alone until two o'clock in the morning, when it would be time for him to start with his horse and cart for the market-town. His wife, anticipating his purpose, hid herself under the straw in the cart.

When the man was well out on the road, his wife popped up from the straw and began her "Candle lecture" at the exact point where it had been broken off by his retreat to the stable. For a moment he was dazed by the unwelcome apparition. But recovering himself, he executed a flank movement which emancipated him from her strategy.

Pulling out the pin, he tipped the cart, and the voluble woman was shot into the road with her unfinished lecture.—Whipping up his horse, the triumphant but ungallant husband went rattling down the road, leaving his persistent wife to get home as best she could.

Wonderful Longevity of Our Widows.

The widows of the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 are, fortunately for themselves and unfortunately for the public treasury, blessed with marvelous health and strength. According to the latest official reports from Washington, twenty-six thousand of these interesting ladies present themselves every three months before the accredited agents of the government and draw their pensions with a precision that shows a high condition of financial discipline. Their ages, individually or collectively, no one of course will be so ungallant as even to hint at, but the date of the last war with Great Britain is pretty well back in the century, and is a more trustworthy record than even Judge Speir's family bible. In the darkness and uncertainty that envelope the pension office at Washington, regarding the possible claims against the government arising out of the late war, the roll of the relicts of the heroes of that patriotic epoch in our history may afford some light and instruction.—The total number of killed and wounded in the 1812-15 campaigns was a little more than five thousand. At the end of seventy years the pension list of the widows alone outnumbers that of the casualties by five to one. If the widows of the veterans of the rebellion stand by the treasury as patriotically as those of 1812, the commissioner of pensions in 1950 will have a couple of hundred thousand of them on his books.

Definitions.

It is curious, the love some people have of definitions. They are the delight of persons who think, but whose thinking has not gone a great way. It is not hard to understand why definitions are in such favor. To begin with, they save a good deal of trouble; it is pleasant to know that we have the result of much patient thought and careful investigation put up for our use in a neat, compact little bundle, easily portable without fatigue. Definitions are compressions of large truth into small compass, and it is plain that they may be very useful things; but the difficulty with them is that they are not always trustworthy, and it is just this essential point about them which the definitioner is incompetent to decide. He wants a sure rule of judgment in a certain matter, because he himself does not understand it well enough to do without a definition, or to make one of himself. Oddly enough, he is often ignorant of what a definition is: he needs, first of all, to have the meaning of that word defined for him.—July Atlantic.

Keep the Birthday.

Let the birthday of each member of the family be always remembered when it comes. Let there be something a little out of the ordinary routine in the arrangement of the table; cookies fashioned as Jennie likes them best; one of Frank's favorite plum puddings, or Julia's special liking, a loaf of ginger cake or a wonderful lemon pie, such as only mamma can make. Then there must be presents; sometimes one may think they cannot be afforded—but reflect: The little one is in need of shoes, dresses aprons, and many other articles; purchase one or more for the birthday, it will seem just as much of a present to her as though she were not obliged to have it. Next come school-books and story-books, a set of furs and a pair of skates (should the birthday occur in the winter), a pretty little dinner-basket, or, if the parent can afford it, a little gold band for one of the white fingers, a necklace, a watch with a shining chain, or the pony that has been wished for so long. Then, if convenient, a party is always pleasant, or a ride or an excursion to a neighboring lake or a mountain. If nothing better can be done, excuse all the little ones from work for the afternoon, and invite a neighboring child to spend it playing with them, or allow the favorite one to go on a long-wished-for visit. Whatever the pleasure for the day may be, it is usually more welcome as a surprise. Encourage the little ones in giving to each other, and remember papa's birthday, too; and believe me, tired, weary mothers, it will be bread cast upon the waters. The days will be only a few ere some returns, and there will be a never-failing supply as long as you and your children live.

Bride and Bridegroom.

They were bride and bridegroom and sat near me at Park Avenue table d'hote. They had wasted something like $8 worth of food, and had come to dessert, both nibbling pie. "Awfully nice, isn't it?" said she. "I can't say I like it," said George, airily. "Why, I think it is ever so nice," persisted the young wife as she mussed it up with a fork.—"It isn't half as nice as the pies my mother used——!" but before he could say more she interrupted with: "There you go again with your everlasting mother! For mercy, goodness sakes stop telling me what she could do. I'm sick and tired of hearing about her. I know there was never anyone like her. I know—I've said—you know—you ought to be ashamed to——" And then came the hot, angry, little tears, pushing each other out, and running down her cheeks defiantly—"tears, idle tears." What need to tell how she left the table, and how she sat down in the reading-room until the night watchman came to put out the lights. Is there not a lesson or a moral hid in here somewhere.—Hotel Mail.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Senator Ben Hill is very much worse as his mind is wandering.

The house committee on foreign affairs in an elaborate report denounces the Venezuela claims commission, and declares its doings fraudulent.

The cabinet Friday considered the question of allowing Chinese laborers in Cuba to pass through the United States. No conclusion was reached.

On application of a Chinaman for naturalization papers, Judge Wylie informed him that the Chinese bill recently enacted absolutely forbade naturalization of Chinese from the date of its passage.

Lieut. Winslow, of the United States navy, has planted, as an experiment in the artificial propagation of oysters, ten million young oysters in Long Island sound. The oysters planted were only two days old, and could be discovered only by the aid of a strong magnifying glass.

Mr. Knott's resolution to declare the forfeiture of lands in New Mexico, Arizona, and Southern California granted the Texas Pacific railway by congress, and provide for their restoration to the public domain, was passed by the house judiciary committee Wednesday.

Both houses of congress have passed the river and harbor grab over the president's veto. The swift action taken in the matter is regarded as a mark of disrespect to the executive, and it is noted in this connection that the appropriations this session exceed those of last year $70,000,000.

General Grant writes to the chairman of the house committee on foreign affairs, in regard to the Japanese indemnity fund, that the money ought now to be refunded, principal and interest, but that Japan does not desire any compromise on part of the interest.

The acting consul general in Egypt telegraphs Secretary Frelinghuysen, from Alexandria, that the archives of the consulate, which it was feared were destroyed, have been found at Cairo, and that he is on the way to Port Said to attend Gen. Stone's family, who have been saved by a faithful friend, and are supposed to be at Ismailia.

In the star-route trial, Wednesday, Mr. Buchanan, a Washington journalist, while on the stand admitted having received material favors at all from Gen. Brady and Mr. Walsh at various times, and acknowledged now being in the former's employ. The witness and other writers who have denounced the prosecution were characterized by the court as "hireling libelers."

It is charged by inmates of the Soldiers' home at Hampton, Va., that the superintendent, Gov. Woodfin, has within the last four years withheld over $50,000 of pension money paid to him in trust; that he has in his employ an ex-rebel; and that in various ways his conduct is deserving of censure. Memorials embodying these accusations have been received by congress.

The house committee on foreign affairs adopted a report respecting the results of the recent Chili-Peru investigation, which discredits Shufeldt and exonerates Minister Hurlbut. The testimony recently taken is reviewed at great length, and the attempt made to use the influence of the United States to further the interests of a grasping company censured.

John Russell Young, United States minister to China, telegraphs that during a riot in Corea a mob attacked the Japanese legation, and two persons were killed and three wounded.—Rear Admiral Cliz, commanding the Asiatic station, was instructed to send a vessel to Corea to protect treaty interests and communicate with Minister Young. Both officers were notified that the treaty with Corea is not ratified, and to govern themselves accordingly.

Within a few days after the adjournment of Congress the President and most of the members of the Cabinet will go away for a short vacation. The President wants to breathe the salt air and he will probably do so. Secretary Lincoln intends to remain quietly at his office all summer. Secretary Teller will go to Colorado, Postmaster General Hatton to Wisconsin, Secretary Folger, who is unwell, to the mountains, Secretary Chandler, who has earned a good rest, will take a run to New York for a short period.

President Arthur declares that he does not feel at liberty now to restrict any of the expenditures in the river and harbor bill. Congress has already decided this question by the overwhelming majority by which the bill was passed over the veto. He will, in all probability, however, in his message to congress next fall suggest that no river and harbor bill be passed next winter, as the sum now appropriated, by good management, could be easily made to extend through the next fiscal year. As congress will come together again within a little over three months from the passage of this bill, only a small proportion of the money appropriated can be spent, even if the work goes on freely at all the points indicated in the bill.

There is considerable feeling in regard to the President's veto of the river and harbor bill. Up to the very hour when the message came into the House there were members who were sanguine that the President would sign the bill. Even members of the Cabinet were not entirely satisfied when they went to the Cabinet meeting what course the President intended to pursue. The drift of the comment is on the whole very favorable to the President, but as a rule, Senators and members who had secured large appropriations for their respective sections in the bill think that the President has made a great mistake politically, while other Congressmen who were not interested in the measure say that the President has done the wisest act of his administration, and one that will commend him to the people of the country irrespective of party affiliations.

The matter of contested customs cases came up before the tariff commission Monday. It was shown that 18,000 suits are now pending as a result of disagreements between importers and the treasury department. Assistant Secretary French expatiated on the evils arising from such a state of affairs, and suggested several remedies, among them the establishment of a customs court whose decisions should be final. Mr. John D. Dix, of New York appeared on behalf of the drug trade, and E. L. Ranlett as a representative of southern interests. After listening to their arguments, the commission adjourned for the day.

No other congress has ever approached the close of a session with so little incident. Ordinarily the hotels are packed with strangers, and the agents of lobbies are here clowding upon the attention of members a thousand and one schemes that are pushed for consideration during the closing hour of the session. Now everything is different. The hotels are deserted; every one appears to be thoroughly worn out with the long session. Both bodies avoid setting the day of adjournment, so as to avoid the six days' suspension of rules that precedes that event, when it is officially declared. It is now thought that congress will not agree upon adjournment so as to leave more than forty-eight hours before the event. The members of the house have become so obstinate and weary that the leaders of the majority have been obliged to adjourn without attempting to consider any of the business on the table. It is probable that daily adjournments will take place from day to day, the house sitting only to transact such business as is necessary to complete the routine work now pending.

Representative Washburn, of Minnesota, who offered a resolution in the house to authorize the secretary of the navy to convene a court of inquiry to examine into the loss of the Arctic exploring steamer Jeannette, says he expects to have a court of inquiry ordered before the close of the present session. The members of the naval committee, to which the resolution was referred, were, he said, all in favor of speedily the resolution at once. Mr. Washburn was asked to explain why he had offered this resolution. He said he had been requested to bring the matter to the attention of congress by Dr. Collins, of Minneapolis, one of his constituents, and a brother of Jerome J. Collins, the New York Herald correspondent with the ill-fated Jeannette party. Mr. Collins asked that a congressional committee be appointed, but this Mr. Washburn deemed impracticable, and after consultation with the secretary of the navy, who informed him that other persons had been urging an investigation, it was agreed to call for the convening of a court of inquiry instead of a congressional committee. Mr. Washburn thought that, although the Jeannette was not a United States vessel, the fact that her officers were American naval officers would be sufficient ground on which to demand a governmental investigation. The inquiry he thought would be directed principally to the character of the vessel before her departure for the Arctic seas, and the conduct of the surviving officers and men after leaving the vessel in the boats.

CONGRESSIONAL.

SENATE.

JULY 29.—The senate passed house bills to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea and to pay to the widow of Minister Garnet an amount equal to his salary for one year. Consideration of the naval appropriation bill was then resumed. An amendment by Mr. Beck was adopted, reducing to $400,000 the item for completing the Miantonomah and launching the other four monitors. The clause abolishing the grade of commodore was struck out, as was also the provision for the condemnation and sale of unserviceable stores belonging to the several bureaus of the navy. It was resolved that a vote on the bill shall be taken at 3 p. m. on Monday.

JULY 30.—The senate after passing a bill to prevent the counterfeiting of foreign securities, took up the naval appropriation measure. Several amendments were adopted looking to the abolition of useless navy-yards, the disposal of worthless ships, and the making of tests and experiments. All laws were repealed providing for promotion and increase of pay on the retired list. An attempt to strike out the Robeson contract failed, and the bill then passed. The remainder of the day was devoted to a discussion of the sundry civil measure. In the house, after some debate, the bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list was sent to the committee on military affairs.

AUG. 1.—In the senate an adverse report was received from the finance committee on the bill authorizing the issue of two per cent. bonds. Seventy-six pages of the sundry civil measure were considered, and an agreement entered into to finish the discussion to-morrow.

AUG. 2.—In the senate a bill was passed appropriating $100,000 for a public building at Leavenworth, Kan. The time in which the Ute commission shall complete its work was extended to Sept. 15, 1883. The sundry civil measure, the last of the long list of appropriation bills, was passed early in the evening, after the adoption of numerous amendments providing for the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars. Among the items adopted were: For the purchase of the late Senator Carpenter's Supreme Court reports and briefs, $8,000; for the purchase of the Temple-Franklin papers, $35,000; for the purchase of the Rochambeau papers, $2,000; for bringing home the remains of deceased ministers and consuls, $10,000; increase of signal service $14,000. The river and harbor bill was passed over the President's veto by a vote of yeas 42, nays 15.

AUG. 3.—The senate passed house bills as follows: Authorizing government buildings at St. Joseph, Mo.; in relation to land patents in the Virginia military district of Ohio; to provide for deductions from the gross tonnage of vessels of the United States; extending to foreign ownships the provisions of the inspection laws now applicable to domestic vessels. The last two measures Mr. Frye declared "the first guns fired in favor of a revival of American commerce." A long debate ensued on tax-reduction bill, "for the relief of banks, patent medicines, and perfumes," but no report was made.

AUG. 4.—The senate passed the house bill to establish diplomatic relations with Persia, and devoted the remainder of the day to a discussion of the tax-reduction measure.

HOUSE.

JULY 30.—In the house about forty bills were presented by individuals and referred to committees, among these one by Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, providing for a constitutional amendment for the election of senators by a direct vote of people of the States. The bill to place Gen. Grant on the retired list was referred to the military committee. A request from the committee on civil-service reform to be allowed to meet during the vacation at any time after November 24, was granted.

AUG. 1.—The house passed a bill appropriating $678,624 for the printing and binding of the tenth census report. A resolution fixing a day for adjournment was promptly throttled. The veto of the river and harbor bill was received with interest and some portions of the message elicited laughter. In explaining his reasons for vetoing the measure the president declares that congress has gone beyond constitutional limits in granting favors to localities where the benefits to be attained are of a purely local nature. Referring evidently to the items injected in the measure by which votes were gained he says: "As the bill becomes more objectionable it secures more support." He also notes the great increase in the sums demanded from year to year. In 1870 only $3,375,000 was asked; in 1875, $6,648,517.50; in 1880, $8,976,500; and in 1881, $11,451,300. The bill just vetoed provided for the distribution of $18,743,875. In closing the president suggests that provision for all necessary improvements can be made at the next session of congress, four months hence.

AUG. 2.—The house passed a bill granting a pension of $37 a month to soldiers who lost an arm at the shoulder. Commanders Sigsbee and Joseph R. Hawley were authorized to receive decorations from foreign potentates. By a vote of 123 yeas to 66 nays the house passed the river and harbor bill over the President's veto. The announcement of the vote was greeted with applause, and Cox, of New York, suggested after such a vote, the house ought to adjourn sine die. Then Aldrich and Murch, the former of whom had voted in the affirmative and the latter in the negative, discovering they were paired with absentees, obtained permission to withdraw their votes, and thus the aggregate was reduced to yeas, 122; nays, 59.

AUG. 3.—The house adopted a resolution providing for a sine die adjournment on Saturday and passed a bill to establish diplomatic relations with Persia by the aid of a consul general, who shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. Mr. Davis, of Illinois, offered a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment providing that the president may disapprove any item of a bill appropriating money and embracing distinct items, while approving of others. Referred.

AUG. 4.—The house employed most of its time in going through the sundry civil bill as amended by the senate, and refused to concur in all important changes. The attempt to perpetuate the national board of health by aid of an appropriation was defeated after a bitter debate.

It is charged that the Boston roads have been billing California freight to Chicago at western rates, instead of at the full agreed proportion of the California rate, and that such freight is rebilled here as coming from the east at the proportion of the California rate, thus effecting a reduction in the tariff on first-class freight amounting to the difference between 60 cents and $1.32 per hundred pounds, which difference is used as a rebate. This operates to the disadvantage of the Southern Pacific lines, and they threaten to adopt the same system of billing via St. Louis and other points. Two expeditions which left Alexandria to repair the railways cut by the rebels were completely successful. Houses just outside the British lines at Ramleh are still being plundered, and one culprit was killed by the patrols. The Scots guards embarked at London on the transport Orient, in presence of the prince and princess of Wales. The British ambassador at Constantinople has again requested the sultan to issue a proclamation denouncing Arabi Pasha as a rebel, but received no satisfaction. The absence of Onou, the Russian representative, from the session of the international conference on Thursday alone prevented a satisfactory arrangement of difficulties. At a council of 364 leading Egyptians it was resolved that Arabi Pasha should defend the country until the conclusion of peace. The French men-of-war have been ordered to Port Said, and Admiral Conrad has received instructions to maintain strict neutrality. Admiral Seymour went on the Helicon to Aboukir for a reconnoissance, and found work in progress at the forts, which are well armed. The admiral has been ordered to establish a censorship on cable messages.

WHAT HAPPENED TO MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

Stone in the Kidney Expelled after Using Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" About two Weeks.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1871, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the 'Favorite Remedy' to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. The 'Favorite Remedy' sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York.

Blissfield Advance: There has been some talk that if the lands were donated the railroad company would build a passenger depot nearly opposite the postoffice. Inquiry at headquarters elicits the information that no such arrangement has been contemplated or is likely to be.

Linked Together.

Complaints go in troops. They are associated by nature. Get one disease and you will have others. Dr. David Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy' strikes at the root of all disease. You cannot take it amiss, no matter what your particular trouble may be. For all ailments of the Kidneys, Liver, Stomach, Bowels, it is worth more than its weight in gold. A silver dollar will buy it, whether you go to your drug store, or address the proprietor, Dr. K. at Rondout, N. Y.

The sudden death of Frances A., wife of Andrew Wilson, cast a gloom over all who knew her. Shortly after noon on the 9th inst., accompanied by her daughter Etta, she went to Tecumseh, where they were joined by Mrs. Abner Wilson, and the afternoon spent in visiting at her aunt's, Mrs. Nancy R. Merritt. She had been in excellent health, and this afternoon seemed unusually well and cheerful. They started home early in the evening. Etta stopped in town to do some trading, and Mrs. W. drove on to her son Abner's at the edge of the village where she was to wait for her. Near the residence she met her sister, Mrs. D. W. Clark, and told her what a pleasant afternoon they had spent. At the gate she met Abner, and remarked that she had a headache and cold, but nothing was thought of it, and he went on to the village. In the house she grew worse. Etta soon came and summoned Dr. House. She grew rapidly worse and died at 9:25 of apoplexy, being conscious till within 20 minutes of death. Mr. Wilson, who was at home, and other members of the family were summoned soon after the Dr. came. Mr. Wilson was not informed that his wife was seriously ill, and his grief when he came to the door and found her a corpse can better be imagined than expressed. Mrs. Wilson was born in New York city in 1828 and came to Michigan in 1839. She was married to Mr. Wilson in 1847, and they have been blessed by nine (9) children; five are now living and growing up to respected manhood and womanhood. She was a devoted member of the Congregational church, and seldom absent from services. The funeral services were conducted by Prof. Lowry at the residence on Friday afternoon, August 11. And thus a devoted wife and tender, loving mother has passed away to a higher life, there to wait till her home above is completed and the family gathered in one by one.

For all diseases affecting the pulmonary, digestive and urinary organs, brain and nervous system, nothing is so strengthening in its effect as Brown's Iron Bitters. It assists nature in every instance, and complete cures follow rapidly.

Saline Observer: While in Tecumseh, Tuesday, we paid the HERALD office a short visit. We found one of the neatest and best equipped offices, for a small sized city, we ever struck, and it is manned by a force as pleasant and gentlemanly as the office is neat and complete. Tecumseh may well be proud of its "print shop" as well as of its many other advantages.

Nervous debility, melancholy, catarrh of the bladder, leucorrhea, etc., are quickly cured by Brown's Iron Bitters.

Hudson Gazette: The King-Hunter contest for the championship of Lenawee, at the Opera House last Saturday evening, was won by Hunter.—King was ahead up to the 18th mile, when he was taken sick and drew off the track. A large crowd was in attendance. We understand that King will challenge Hunter for another race to come off at Adrian this month.

Hudson Post: This locality has been especially favored during the stormy weather, the heavy storms having passed north and south, and wheat standing in the field during the rain, is in good shape, and has been mostly secured within a day or so.—Clearing weather and a steady rising barometer, indicate good weather, and we hope the damage may not be as great as reported in other sections.

Hudson Gazette: Here, widowers and bachelors, is a chance for some of ye. A widow, well preserved and companionable—but lonely as one can be—wants a husband! She has a nice home all paid for, and objects to going home with groom—she simply wants a bird for her cage! Fact! Big chance! Good references furnished and required. A kind, Christian fellow, free from tobacco and tansy, can fasten right on to this bonanza.

Adrian Record: A young man named Alexander Brown, of Blissfield, was on Thursday arrested by Deputy Jibb, charged with taking $245 from Robert Bruce, of Ogden. He was arraigned before Justice Long and bail required for his appearance on the 16th. It is stated that Brown and a man named Brockway, were riding in a wagon with Bruce, who on the journey exhibited his money. Brown got out at a point for watering horses, and after his departure Bruce missed his money. It was rumored Saturday that the money had been found in a barn since Brown's arrest.

THE Adrian Times of Saturday gives an account of a collision which occurred the night before in the Lake Shore yards: "Lake Shore freight trains 53 and 54 usually meet in his city between twelve and one o'clock at night. Last night No. 53 had just arrived and taken her position on a side track, when 54 came steaming in just alongside. The two tracks upon which the two trains were to pass are connected by a short siding. Unfortunately the switch of this siding had been left open where it connected with the track which train 54 was to occupy, and as that train came in of course she took the siding and ran into the other train. The engine struck a box car loaded with merchandise, on the side and end, tipping it over and smashing one side and the roof. Another car was badly stoven, while the engine suffered the loss of one of her steam chests. Trains are limited to a very slow speed in the yards, or the accident might have been much worse.

Abide With Me.

BY JULIA MEREDITH.

Abide with me; the sunset's golden finger
Has drawn a veil between the world and me.
Upon the mountain top his rays still linger,
But in the valley I deep darkness see.
And whelming shadows hover over me.

Abide with me; the way is drear and lonely,
And frightful phantoms start from every side
Which battle for my soul, that soul which only Knows Thee on earth, in Heaven, O Crucified!
For that dear reason keep Thou near my side.

Abide with me; the avengers, pain and anguish,
Clutch at my life and will not let me go;
And pride and love of ease have made these languish,
These flowers, love and faith, which bloomed so
When first I knew Thy smile, long, long ago.

Abide with me; earth's blandishments beset me;
They rise like clouds between my soul and Thine,
Hiding Thee, so that soon I must forget Thee,
Unless a beam from loving eyes divine
Shall through them cast its radiance to mine.

Abide with me; dear Lord let me not perish!
Chase from heart and way these phantoms dire;
Thine "altar coals" on my heart's altar cherish,
So that each sin consumed in love's pure fire
May clog no more my soul's deep, strong desire.

And when at last through earth's dark vale ascending
I reach the heavenly hills, and at Thy feet
Look, Lord, upon Thee, doubts and fears all blending
In one long gaze of joy so deep, so sweet,
Then satisfied, I need no more repeat
Abide with me!

TWO TRUE HEARTS.

Laura Allen sat alone at her grand piano, running her white fingers lightly over the ivory keys. But the strains which fell from them were sad ones, and a shadow rested upon Laura's fair forehead, not wont to be there.

Sweet Laura had a gallant lover—ah, we have reached the shadow now! A hasty word—a quick action, thoughtlessly done, had thrown a coolness between them, and he had not been near her for a week.

This was her birthday. Could it be that Frank would let it pass without one token of remembrance? That would be pain too hard to bear! Oh, no! he would come, surely, before the evening was over.

A ring at the door set her heart to throbbing like a trip hammer. She sat still, listening for Frank's step, proudly resolving not to show him how glad she was.

But no Frank appeared. The maid who answered the bell came in, and crossing to Laura, she gave her a pretty, rustic basket of flowers, saying:

"A boy left this for you, Miss Laura."

"Thank you, Ann," said Laura, kindly, as she took the fragrant gift, the pain at her heart easing a little, for, if not himself, this must be Frank's gift, and some token would be with it to show that he loved her still.

"Oh, how lovely!" she breathed, bending low to inhale the fragrance of the glossy tuba-rose in the centre, and looking lovingly at the great purple-hearted pansies, the rich crimson rosebuds, pale tea-roses, and bright geranium blooms, resting in a circle of odorous leaves.

Hurriedly she pushed back the delicate lace paper, searching eagerly amid the blossoms for card or note, but finding none.

"Still, I think he remembered my birthday and sent it," she said. "If he did, he will show it next time we meet, and I shall know he wants to be friends again."

She carried it to her room and put it in a cool window, to keep it fresh and sweet for Frank's sake. And the next evening, at a small social party, she met Frank himself.

He gave her a swift glance, and she saw his face suddenly change and harden—he gave her a cold bow, and walked away, while Laura felt her heart grow faint in her breast, and her eyes were full of bitter pain. But she was too proud to show it. She chatted gaily, played and sung when requested, and longed for Frank to come and speak one word to her. He did not come. But late in the evening she paused with her escort close by where he stood with Gertie Lyon, and heard Miss Lyon tell him that she had lost, that day, while out riding, a very valuable ring. She heard Frank answer—

"I can sympathise with you, Miss Lyon. I lost a garnet ring to-day, for which I would not have taken any money."

"What a pity! Have you any idea where you lost it?" asked Gertie Lyon.

"Not in the least," said Frank. "I was in twenty different places, and I revisited all without success. The ring was my mother's, and I prized it very highly."

They passed on, and Laura heard no more.

When she got home she took the basket of flowers from the window, and watered it to keep it fresh.

"I will save you as long as I can for your own beauty, pretty things!" she said. "I know now it was not Frank who sent you, and I don't care for the giver, but the gift is sweet, and I will keep it."

She did keep it, for more than a week, by daily watering, and setting it on her outer window-sill to catch the dew at night. And all this time Frank never came near her.

But at last the beautiful basket of flowers withered.

"I will keep the basket and the moss," said Laura, "for they are so pretty. But the poor blossoms are faded and dead, like my fond dreams. Ah me!"

She flung the flowers from the window, and then took up the cushion of green moss, and shook it lightly, to free it from the withered petals clinging to it. Something glittered as she shook the moss, and fell with a ringing sound upon a small white paper, lying at the bottom of the basket, under the moss and the flowers.

Oh, delight! Frank did send the basket, for Frank's garnet ring was in her hand! She had not only discovered that he had not forgotten her, but she could restore to him his lost treasure. All this time it had been in her reach. She snatched up the little paper, unfolded it, and read these words:

"DEAR LAURA:—I cannot bear this coldness. If my hasty words wounded you, forgive me, darling, and take me back again. Wear some of these rosebuds in your hair at Mrs. Lyons' to-morrow night, and I shall know. I am forgiven. Otherwise, I shall know I must bid hope farewell for ever.

FRANK."

The note dropped from Laura's nerveless fingers. Now she knew why Frank was so cold at Gertie Lyons' party! She remembered that she had worn a silver arrow in her hair, and not a flower.

She flew to her desk, and wrote these words to him:

"DEAR FRANK:—By the oddest chance I have found your garnet ring. Will you come to me this evening and get it?

LAURA."

She dressed herself prettily, when evening came, and went down to the drawing-room to wait for Frank.

Not very long did she wait. He came early, with some constraint in his manner, but trying to be friendly as ever.

Laura quietly laid the ring in his hand, and then his face lit.

"It is really mine!" he said. "I am so glad! Where did you find it, Laura?"

"In a basket," said Laura, coloring slightly. "And I found something else there, too."

"Indeed! What was it?" asked Frank.

"A note, which you sent me on my birthday, and I never saw until to-day."

Frank caught her hands. "Laura! Is that true?"

"It is true, Frank," she said, meeting his eyes bravely. "The basket was so pretty that I did not move the flowers until they withered—not until to-day."

"Then you did not wear that sharp thing in your hair on purpose to wound me?"

"Oh, no! no! Frank——"

"Well, Laura, what?"

"Nothing, only—if I had found the note I would have worn the rosebuds."

Frank caught her to his heart.

"Laura, are you mine again?"

"Yes, if you will take me."

Frank did "take her"—literally—and not many words could be spoken for a moment or two. Then he said:

"Laura, you have found the ring—will you wear it until I replace it with a wedding-ring?"

"Yes Frank."

He slipped it on her slender figure, and said:

"Guard it well, dear Laura, for it has reunited two true hearts."

Beautify Your School-Rooms.

Teachers, have you done anything toward beautifying your school-rooms? If you have not, do not permit another week to pass without doing something in this direction. Time and money expended in this way will pay you a greater dividend than any other investment that you can make. By doing so, you will not only render your school-rooms attractive and home-like, but you will have accomplished a work that will assist you very much in the government of your pupils. It will not only do this, but it will promote the interest of your schools in every respect. It will cause the patrons of your schools to have a higher regard for you, and they will take a deeper interest and work harder for the success of your schools than they otherwise would have done. If you desire your pupils to attend promptly and always be on time, make your school-rooms more pleasant and attractive than their homes; then you will accomplish your desire, and not until then.

No wonder so many children almost hate the school-room. How could they do otherwise, when they are compelled to sit in a room as black and dirty as a barn? Teachers, decorate your walls with beautiful pictures and appropriate mottoes, and you will be amply paid for your trouble. If you do not think you are able yourself, ask your pupils to assist you; you will find many anxious to do what they can. If you secure their help in this work, instead of trying to tear down their school-house, they will be interested in its beautification, and do all in their power to make it beautiful. By decorating your school-rooms with beautiful works of art and appropriate mottoes, you will not only render it pleasant and captivating, but you will cultivate the taste of your pupils and give them a higher conception of the beautiful than they otherwise would have acquired.

Teachers, after you have made everything around you pleasant and fascinating, do not forget yourselves. If there is any person in the world that should look neat, surely it is the teacher. He should never enter the school-room without first making himself as neat and becoming as circumstances will permit. When you arise in the morning do not forget to put on your smiles, wear them to the school-room, and keep them on all day. Do not take them off as soon as you get in sight of the school-house, carry them the remainder of the way in your pocket, and then put them in your desk and lock them up for fear some of your pupils will get one!

Notwithstanding the inconsistency of such actions, yet it does seem that there are some such teachers, or at least they style themselves as such. Shame on such a teacher! Beautify yourselves with kind words and loving smiles. Aim always to have the most genial countenance in school. If your faces are beautiful in that way, then your pupils will not be hateful, and their faces will be lit up with cheering smiles, for as the teacher is, so is the scholar.

Setting His Mark High.

Soon after the late Horace Maynard entered Amherst College he put on the door of his room a large letter V. Its presence exposed him to questions and ridicule, but, paying no attention to either, he kept the letter in its place. At the end of four years graduation day came, and Mr. Maynard was appointed to deliver the valedictory. After having received the compliments of the faculty and students of the college for the honor he had received, Mr. Maynard called the attention of his fellow-graduates to the letter V over the door of his room, and asked if they then understood what was meant by the letter V. After short reflection they answered, "Yes. Valedictory." He replied, "You are right." His fellows then asked if he had the valedictory on his mind when he pasted the letter over his door. Mr. Maynard replied, "Assuredly I had."—Boston Journal.

They say there is a man in Gunnison county only twenty-six years old who has killed twenty-seven men already. It is very rare that a young physician attains a practice like that at the age of twenty-six.

The Daisy Party.

It was rather hard for Hessie, when she had planned on having such a nice time at grandpa's, that she should step off the big rock under the butternut tree in the sheep-pasture, where she and Ned and Bella were playing picnic, and sprain her ankle, to say nothing of spilling a whole small pitcher full of lemonade.

Of course there was an end to Hessie's good times for a week at least.

At first it seemed pleasant enough to lie on the pretty lounge in grandma's cool sitting-room and look at picture-books, and to have them all wait on her—even grandpa looked in occasionally to ask if anything were wanted.

But after a little while Hessie got tired of it, very tired indeed.

There were long hours when she could picture Bella and Ned racing in the hay-field; tossing the new-mown hay over one another, playing "I spy" among the tumbles; raking after the cart; and finally riding in triumph up to the big barns on a load of sweet-smelling clover-hay.

Nobody knew how she longed to be with them.

So I am sorry to say Hessie grew fretful and impatient. Nothing quite pleased her.

"Oh, I wish I had something to do and think of," said she. "I wish Aunt Gussie would come! Why can't——"

Right here before she knew it, Hessie's eyelids closed and [illegible] fast asleep.

It was an afternoon in the last of June, and the sun was shining hot and bright; but grandma came softly in and drew the curtains, shutting out the light and heat and dust.

"I hope the child will have a good long nap," said she, going back to Aunt Nan in the next room.

"I wish Gussie would come," said Aunt Nan, tearing off the breadths of a big apron; "she would amuse her. Why—why, there she is now."

And indeed, Aunt Gussie was just stepping out of the old yellow stage-coach which had stopped before the garden gate.

More than an hour after, when Hessie awoke from a wonderful dream, in which she dined with Queen Victoria, she pinched herself to make sure she was not still dreaming.

For there, on the little stand beside the lounge, was the funniest sight she ever saw—eight little old ladies with faces round as moons, framed in snow-white cap-borders, with white strings under the chins.

Their table was a big toadstool, spread with a burdock leaf, and their chairs were small toadstools—all set upright in a shallow box of sand. Their dishes were rose-leaves and buttercups, and in the centre of the table on a platter-shaped leaf was a great green grasshopper.

It was so very queer! Where did everything come from? Hessie lay still and stared and wondered for a long time.

At last she cried, clapping her hands with a gleeful laugh:

"It's Aunt Gussie come home! Nobody else would have thought of such a thing."

Aunt Gussie put her bright face in at the door just then.

"Maybe I wouldn't if somebody had not told me," said she.

"Why, Hessie, I thought you would like to see them. I borrowed them of a friend who keeps a boarding-school. Do you guess how they are made?"

Hessie guessed and guessed, but she could not guess half the pretty, clever fancies which had been put into the making of the dainty little ladies.

"Why, I should think you had been busy all the time I was asleep!" said Hessie, when her aunt had ended the story of the daisy party.

"Not very busy," said Aunt Gussie, laughing. "I had the pleasure of thinking how surprised and pleased my little girl would be when she woke up, and that made the work go very fast indeed."

"I should think it would," said Hessie, gazing at the queer little ladies with delight. "I wish I could make them, too. Do you suppose I could, if you should show me how?"

"I think you could very easily," said her aunt. "The only way to find out is to try. If you like, I will show you the first one I make, and you can copy from that."

"Oh, I should like it ever so much!" said Hessie.

"Then," said her aunt, "you must be very careful not to let your fingers get sticky with the sap, for it will spoil the pretty green and white of the grasshopper's coat."

"I will be very careful indeed," said Hessie, who was so happy that she could hardly lie still long enough to let her aunt fasten her bonnet-strings.

Aunt Gussie had brought a large basket with her, and she set it down beside the lounge when she came back from her room. Then she took from it a long, green grasshopper, made of a leaf and a bit of green silk and wire, and set it upright in the sand.

"Now," said she

In "Walton's Complete Angler" is the story that a pike was then taken in 1497, in a fish-pond near Heilbronn, in Arabia, with a ring fixed in its gills on which was engraved the words, "I am the fish which Frederick the Second, Governor of the World, put in this pond on the fifth of October, 1263," by which it would appear that this fish had lived three hundred and sixty years. This fish was said to have been nineteen feet in length, and to have weighed three hundred and fifty pounds.

There is a class of objects to be found in ponds and ditches, of great interest—the rotifers so called because they have a motion resembling that of a wheel. In length they are about the fifteenth part of an inch, and form beautiful objects in water under the microscope. They are marvellously tenacious of life. You may dry them to a powder, and keep them a year or two in your cabinet, and when again put into the water they will in the course of an hour or two revive and be found whirling about with their accustomed vigor.

The most clever of all spiders are found on the shores of the Mediterranean. They not only live in silk-lined tunnels in the loose soil, but actually have doors to their houses. These doors are made of layers of web and earth, and shut down naturally by their own weight, so as to be hidden by the grass growing above them. But if by chance they are disturbed, the spider herself will often rush to the top of the tube, and sticking her claws into the door will hold it down with all her might as she presses her body against the side of her house. When the spider would ensnare a victim, she goes to the top of the hole or tunnel, pushes open the door, fastens it back by five threads to blades of grass near, then spins a web round the open hole, and goes back to her tunnel. When a beetle or other insect is caught, the spider darts out, pierces her victim with her poison fangs, sucks its blood and carries the carcass away some distance from the hole. To guard against the crawling insects that creep into their holes to attack them, these spiders make a second tunnel branching out of the first, and build a doorway between them, so that they can retreat into the passage in case of attack, and, setting their back against the door, baffle the intruder.

Spanish Silver by the Gallon.

Last Saturday, while a colored man by the name of Lewis Lowry was plowing in his field, about six miles east of Opelousas, his plow struck on some obstruction, which, upon examination, proved to be a ten gallon jar filled with Spanish silver coins of the date of 1779, and bearing the imprint of Charles III., of Spain. The amount found is estimated at $8,000 or $10,000. One of the coins, a dollar piece, was brought to town to-day, and from all appearances had not circulated long, it appearing almost like a new piece. It is said by those who saw the money that all of it was of this description, and none of it less than 100 years old.—New Orleans Times.

Nevada Honesty Rewarded.

The old saw that "honesty is the best policy," received a signal illustration in Bodie on Wednesday evening. A well-known carpenter received between $100 and $200 for a recent job, and instead of jumping the town, as has frequently been done before by others, he forthwith paid off a lot of debts, leaving him but a solitary half. Thinking this small amount hardly worth keeping, he stepped into a faro bank and laid the coin between the jack and ace, winning. He made several more bets, winning nearly every time, and soon had a pile aggregating $70. Such little episodes as this serve to brighten the pathway of the sojourner of the mining camps.—Virginia City Chronicle.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 17, 1882.

It is possible that the Republican congressional convention will be changed from the 25th to the 23d to accommodate the soldiers' reunion at Ogden which occurs on the former date.

The Adrian Times the other day complimented Mr. Swheets for his action in voting against the passage of the river and harbor appropriation bill over the president's veto, and we feel equally gratified. But the Times, which has been singing the praise of Mr. Ferry of late, contains not a word of censure for the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who voted for the steal. Will the Times please explain?

This from the Blissfield Advance. Hush! Bro. Samsen; you shouldn't be too inquisitive about such delicate matters.

The labor strikes which are now demoralizing business, causing riot and murder and threatening a financial panic, are one result of continuing a war tariff and war taxation during twenty years of peace. The enhanced cost of living, caused by the tariff, has more than kept pace with the increase of wages, so that wages (when measured by what they will bring) have been continually on the decline, until now laborers can scarcely earn enough to keep soul and body together. The abundant crops of the past three seasons have alone saved the country from a disastrous financial revulsion.

When Congress adjourned Senator Pendleton, in the Senate, offered a resolution complimenting Acting Vice President Davis for the manner in which he had performed the duties of presiding officer. In the House Mr. Robeson went to several Democrats and personally requested them to offer the customary resolution of thanks.—To their credit, be it said, every one of them declined, and Keifer slunk [illegible] with a vote of dishonor as emphatic as a direct vote of censure would have been. No wonder the members of the house were anxious to get home.

The Ypsilanti Commercial gives a vigorous kick at the method practiced in the Washtenaw Republican convention. Boss Cameron has a zealous disciple and imitator in the person of Boss Beal, of Ann Arbor, and the latter "run" the convention after the most approved Cameronian plan.—The friends of Capt. Allen vowed vengeance and threatened to send a contesting delegation to the congressional convention, but Capt. Allen has since been seen, and an arrangement made by which Sawyer will walk into the convention with a solid Sawyer delegation. How do the rural Republicans enjoy the congressional outlook thus far?

The Jackson Patriot says: The Senators and Representatives who on this occasion voted to sustain this extravagant and profligate expenditure of money, (the River and Harbor bill,) should be spotted by their constituents, and if nominated for re-election every effort should be made for their defeat. Brave words well spoken.—Thoughtful men of both parties may well view with alarm the tendency to extravagance and corruption in Congress. The only remedy for the evil is to apply the knife fearlessly to the cancer and dig it out by the roots.—Every man who voted for the "duck puddle" steal and who has the cheek to seek a re-election should be defeated at the convention or at the poles.

At the next presidential election in 1884 there will be 411 votes in the electoral college; necessary to a choice 206. As the increase is pretty evenly divided between the northern and southern states, the college will be divided politically substantially the same as in 1880. The vote of the several states under the new apportionment is given below:

Alabama	10	Missouri	16
Arkansas	7	Nebraska	5
California	6	Nevada	3
Colorado	3	New Hampshire	4
Connecticut	6	New Jersey	9
Delaware	3	New York	36
Florida	4	North Carolina	11

Louisiana	8	Texas	18

A FREE TRADE PARTY.

A NEW POLITICAL MOVEMENT INAUGURATED IN WAYNE COUNTY.

Their Platform of Principles and Address to the Voters of the First District.

A new party, based upon a tariff for revenue only has been launched in Detroit. We give below their platform and address to the voters of the first district. The names of about 250 residents of Detroit are appended, which puts the movement upon a strong basis at the very outset. The people are ripe for a good, strong independent movement on almost any respectable platform. A party of this character boldly launched and wisely piloted could easily carry the second Congressional district:

To the Electors of the First Congressional District of Michigan.

It has become evident to all intelligent voters:

1. That there is no longer a distinct live issue between the republican and democratic parties.

2. That the representatives of both these organizations in congress are equally responsible for the extravagant and vicious legislation of recent sessions, and for the continuance of the intolerable and needless burden of taxation far beyond the legitimate necessities of government.

3. That it is folly to continue to hope that either of these parties will address itself earnestly to any real redress of public grievances or to any genuine work of reform.

It is also evident to all intelligent citizens that during the last 10 years new and burning questions have been forcing themselves upon public attention, and that the voting masses are warmly interested in them, and are eager to arrange themselves in new party lines which shall define where each man stands, not on the issues of 1860, but on the issues of 1882.

The most pressing of all the new questions, which includes them all, is the question of tariff reform. The existing system was born in time of war, when every energy of the nation was strained in the supreme effort of self-preservation, and was built upon the patriotic willingness of the people to make all sacrifices for the national safety. Though nearly 20 years have passed since the return of peace, and the disbandment of our colossal land and water forces, these vast revenues are still collected, these heavy war burdens are still borne; and so vast a sum is annually wrung from the people that, in spite of the wholesale extravagance at Washington, the government gets over $150,000,000 a year more than congress can squander.

Nor is this the greatest grievance. Besides the taxes heaped upon the people in time of war, a colossal protective tariff was saddled upon the country, especially designed not to produce revenue for the government, but to tax the consumers for the benefit of domestic manufacturers. Under this system the people of the country, in addition to the two hundred million dollars a year, they pay government in duties, pay annually nearly half the amount of the present national [illegible] of all the necessities of life.

In recognition of these facts, and in a firm belief that the people are deeply interested in the question of tariff reform, we now appeal to the voters of this congressional district.

We believe:

1. That a protective tariff, like slavery, is a relic of a barbarous age, and that to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market is the inalienable right of every man. The only tariff on imports which should ever be tolerated by a free people, is the tariff strictly for revenue.

2. That the greatest burden now borne by the American people is the unjust, unequal and iniquitous system of taxation called a protective tariff. It is nothing more nor less than a bonus given to a privileged class of manufacturers, to pay which bonus the food, clothing and shelter of the vast majority are unjustly taxed.

3. That an intelligent revenue reform in the direction of free trade would actually benefit a large majority of manufacturers by widening the markets and reducing the cost of materials.

4. That the protective tax oppresses the farmer and laborer, destroys our merchant marine, breeds and enriches monopolies and impoverishes the poor.

5. That our present tariff, leading as it does to lobbying and extravagance, is one great cause of official corruption. While we are earnestly in favor of a radical reform of the civil service, we believe that the abolition of the protective features of our tariff will work a great practical improvement in that direction.

6. That the merchants, manufacturers and laboring men of this district are especially interested in a policy which would break down the wall now closing in one side of Detroit and make our city, what it should already be, the commercial center of western Ontario and Michigan.

We therefore demand that at the earliest practicable moment, our government shall commence negotiations for a reciprocity treaty with Canada, that every incumbrance to American shipping shall be immediately removed, and that the reduction of existing import duties shall be immediately commenced and steadily continued until every so-called protective feature is eliminated.

Thirty years ago it became necessary to organize a new party for the object of abolishing slavery. It has now become necessary to organize a new party for the object of abolishing a protective tariff, which oppresses more people than did slavery. The free trade league of Detroit, which has been working in the cause of tariff reform for many years, has resolved to take open political action at once.

We most earnestly desire that all who sympatize with the principles above stated send their names to the chairman of the undersigned committee, to the end that the district may be properly organized by wards and townships for the coming congressional election, and the way paved for the nomination of a distinctively free trade candidate for congress.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

SIXTEENTH WEEK.

Your supper is like the Hidalgo's dinner; very little meat, and a great deal of table cloth.
—LONGFELLOW.

Werter had a love for Charlotte
Such as words could never utter;
Would you know how first he met her?
She was cutting bread and butter.
—THACKERAY.

Mrs. Columbus began housekeeping Sunday morning with an addition of one boarder to the family. Geo. Marshall is to live with us for a few weeks. He has agreed to let his moustache alone and to pay fifteen cents a meal with his lodging thrown in. This will enable the landlady to set a much better table than formerly. Pork and potatoes three times a day has become rather monotonous, and besides is not the most healthy kind of diet for a dyspeptic. Hereafter we are promised cucumber pickles once a day, mustard once a day and sourkrout once a day. This will make a pleasing variety. If perk does'nt agree with a man, he can help himself to mustard, and if he becomes cloyed on potatoes, a tablespoonful of sourkrout will furnish a good antidote. Sunday's dinner was a memorable occasion. In addition to the regular family the widow Gilman and Homer were invited in, as [illegible] that day. Columbus put on a shirt collar for the first time since he began work last April, and Mrs. Columbus dressed her hair with a high backcomb, which had been an heir-loom in her father's family for three generations. A span clean table cloth which touched the floor on two sides covered the table, and the pewter teaspoons shown like a peeled onion under the gas-light. Columbus was happy. "Now then, young man," said he, as he wiped the baby's nose and laid the sixth potato on Homer's plate, "its high time there was a weddin' on these premises, or somewheres adjacent. Here's Geo. Marshall who's good lookin' and of fair stature. He takes a good square meal, and can sling a paint brush or a pitch fork with the best of 'em. He's an old bach and needs somebody to pare his corns and sew on his shirt buttons. The widder Gilman is just the daisy for him. She's fat, fair and forty. She's got kitchen furniture of her own with enough surplus to furnish a spare bed-room. She wears a wig, that's true, and George ought to have one too. She's six inches taller'n him, and could reach round him twice on a pinch, but she's a buster on Johnny cake and slap-jacks, and would be willin' to fetch in the wood and build the fires as reg'lar as an eight-day clock. We can have the splicin' done right here in my house, and I'll get up a weddin' supper for 'em at two shillin' a head, with fried pertaters and sourkrout thrown in gratis. George would have a good start on a family, for Homer is a bright boy. He's cross-eyed, to be sure, and a little short in one leg, but I never saw a boy o' his age take to pertaters better'n he does. If George is too bashful to do his own poppin', I'll act as agent for him on a commission, and if the widder once spies a good bait, she won't go fooling around long before takin' it. If they can't find a minister handy, I'll do the job myself. I married lots o' couples when I was Justice over'n Canada, and a man who can ask five minutes blessin' over one of our ord'nary meals ought to be able to go through a weddin' ceremony."

George and the widow were seated next each other across the southeast corner of the table, and the effect on them of Ichabod's enthusiastic matrimonial advice was terrific. George blushed at the widow and the widow blushed at George, and they both blushed at each other. It is difficult to tell what the sequel would have been if Ichabod, having devoured the last mouthful of provender on the table, had not suddenly adjourned the dinner to kiss the cook.

Monday, July 18th.—The men drew in hay and George Marshall helped. Got half a ton of bran for the cows.

Tuesday, July 19th.—Columbus plowed up the parsnip ground to fix for ruta bagas. We have been at work at the parsnips for over two months to make them grow. Tried plaster and ashes, mustard, hartshorn and electricity, but all to no purpose. Columbus says the seed was too fresh. should have got three-year-old seed.

Wednesday, July 20th.—The men both hoed beans all day. I bought two new Buckeye three-cornered double reel traveling hoes. The handle is made in telescopic sections, with a reel on the end like a patent fish pole. A man can insert his hoe into the ground at one end of a bean row, pull out the handle and back to the other end of the row, wind up the reel and draw the hoe to him. It is somewhat expensive, as it costs ten dollars, but I expect to double the bean crop by working out the rows with this hoe.

Thursday, July 21st.—It rained until noon. The men tarred the sheeps' noses. Columbus says that nothing will keep away the foot rot and grasshoppers, like tar. Molasses candy is just as good but it costs more, so he prefers giving the sheep tar and keeping the molasses candy for the baby. In the afternoon they pulled mullein out of the strawberry bed, and dug the dead cedars out of the front yard.

Friday, July 22d.—Another shower last night. The men pulled pig weeds out of the tulip bed, swept the cellar floor and sprinkled it with carbolic acid and linseed oil, spliced a hame on the double harness and cut wood.

Saturday, July 23d.—Columbus and Ellie shouldered their hoes and went into the bean patch this morning. The new patent hoes would flop from one row to the other and dig up more beans than weeds. Ichabod is now experimenting on a rudder attachment to the hoe, which, if it works as he expects, will make the patent hoe perfect. I intend to take out a patent on the attachment.

George is smitten with the widow,
And he says he's bound to win her.
Would you know how first he met her?
It was at our Sunday dinner.

Columbus says: "Why, Marshall or'ter
Press his wooing like a man;
She is tall and he is shorter,
But yet they'd make a nobby span."

The annual reunion of the Lenawee County Soldiers and Sailors will be held in the city of Adrian, Wednesday Aug. 30th. A cordial invitation is extended to all soldiers and sailors in the county to be present.—Adrian's hospitality is proverbial, and is generously tendered to all.

GEO. COCHRANE, President.
W. Stearns, Secretary.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to [illegible] which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more all details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

The Popular Science Monthly.

In "The Popular Science Monthly" for September, Mr. C. M. Lungren gives the fullest and clearest statement that has been published of the relative cost of "Electric and Gas Illumination." His information is derived from first sources, and his manner of presentation is that of one who has a full understanding of the subject. Dr. Felix L. Oswald writes in the clear, pungant, aggressive style that is characteristic of him, concerning "Longevity," to the effect that the length of life is to a considerable extent a matter of temperament and habit, and shows how it is affected by the occupation of the individual. The editor in his table commends the example of Sir John Lubbock—a man of wealth, who gives his time to scientific investigation—to American young men of wealth; has something to say on the views recently expressed by Mr. Beecher on marriage and [illegible] tion; and suggests as a proper American memorial to Mr. Darwin the institution of a fund for scientific research. New York: D. Appleton & Company. Fifty cents per number, $5 per year.

Scipio, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1879.

I am the Pastor of the Baptist church here, and an educated physician. I am not in practice, but am my sole family physician, and advise in many chronic cases. Over a year ago I recommended your Hop Bitters to my invalid wife, who has been under medical treatment of six of Albany's best physicians several years.—She has become thoroughly cured of her various complicated diseases by their use. We both recommend them to our friends, many of whom have also been cured of their various ailments by them.

Rev. E. R. Warren.

Eight men attempted to arrest Tony Conkrite, an escaped lunatic, at Bath, Clinton county, on Sunday. Tony weighs 240 lbs and has an inspiration which tells he should marry a certain girl of Bath. The eight men tried moral suasion on Tony and he tried his fists on the eight men. Fists triumphed and moral suasion went to the wall. So did the eight men, as he "cleaned out" the whole party.

Kidney Complaint is a miserable, weakening disease; pains in the small of the back; strange, indescribable feelings in the back and sides; the least exertion wearies; a show of brick dust or albuminous matter in the urine or lack of it; breath short; sharp and darting pains about the vitals, and dropsical swellings, are certain evidences of diseased Kidneys. Kellogg's Columbian Oil cures this disease in all its forms, and your druggist is authorized to warrant all sold, and will refund the money in all cases that fail to give satisfaction.

THE Hillsdales failing to find an English crew to contest blades with them, will go over to the continent for a short stay, and then will hasten home.

THE Brooklyn Union Agricultural Fair Association held a trotting matinee on their grounds in Brooklyn last Wednesday and Thursday. Messrs, Reynolds and Silvers, of this village, were invited to bring their horses, and did so. They also brought home first money for every race in which their horses started, viz: Stallion race for four counties, free for all, and four-year-olds. In the stallion race were invited the following horses: "Hambletonian Gift," of Concord; "Gilt Edge," of Hudson; "North Hawk," of Jackson; "Siam Chief," of Cambridge, and Reynolds and Silvers' "Banker Rothchilds," of Tecumseh. In the four-year-old race there were five entries, and all good ones. In the free for all the entries were the same as in the stallion race with two additions. Reynolds and Silvers own good horses, know how to handle them, and generally take first money wherever they show them.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON and wife left on Tuesday morning for Chautauqua, and will return on the 25th.

PETOSKEY is putting on city airs.—It has water works, a $100,000 hotel, and will soon have the electric light.

DR. LAYARD, of Raisin, was in town last week, the first time since his recovery from his long and serious illness.

COUNTY Clerk Hunter is taking a brief respite from official cares this week, and passed a day or two among his Tecumseh friends.

THE State Grange held a harvest festival at Lansing yesterday. Among the speakers present was Hon. Thos. F. Moore, of this county.

THE excursion to Camp Jerome last Sunday passed off very pleasantly. About twenty persons from here joined the train at Britton's.

REV. C. C. SINK will occupy the pulpit of the M. E. church next Sabbath morning, and in the evening will preach on "The world's indebtedness to the Bible."

Adrian Press: Franklin's town board allows the drain commissioner $1,50 per day for services. He is a farmer, and pays $3, per day for harvest hands, while he does the town drain business.

THE towers on the Presbyterian church having become weather-beaten and dilapidated to such an extent as to threaten injury to the walls, are to be rebuilt and put in good shape. Work upon them has commenced this week.

WM. DEMOTT is doing a fine business this summer for the Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. He places new policies on the books every month and the best part of the business is that his patrons all stay with him as they are more than satisfied.

LEVI BOWEN, of Raisin, brought into our office last week a branch of this year's growth, cut from a black cap raspberry plant, bearing over two dozen very large ripe berries. It is a strange freak of a raspberry bush to bear fruit on the first year's growth.

CLINTON has secured a connection with the telephone exchange at Tecumseh. Macon, Tipton and Ridgeway can easily secure the same advantage if they desire it. The line to Clinton will be constructed as soon as possible, probably within the next three or four weeks.

TOM ADAMSON has sold his stock of jewelry, plated ware, etc., to C. A. Kiel, who will hereafter run both sides of the store. Judging from the efficient manner in which he has conducted the book trade, we should say that Mr. Kiel would succeed equally as well in the jewelry line.

A CARD from Arthur Pardington, dated at Jamestown, Dakota, Aug. 0th, '82, says: "Crops are looking beautifully, with some fears of the 'hoppers,' but if they will let us alone this year, next year will see an influx to the territory as was never before seen. I am well and in a drug store here."

Detroit Evening News: The Adrian council has repealed its dog muzzling law. During the discussion it was stated that there was a dog in the city uglier and meaner looking than any member of the city council. The dogs are to hold a meeting and resolve to take action about the slander.

THE annual catalogue of the Tecumseh Public Schools is now ready for distribution. It is a neat pamphlet of twenty-two pages, containing the courses of study, rules and regulations, list of officers and teachers, examinations, calendar, list of graduates, and much other valuable information.—Copies can be obtained of any member of the School Board.

E. G. COOK, of Clinton, has bought the residence of Dr. Peters, in this village, and will soon remove his family to Tecumseh. Mr. Cook will be a solid acquisition to the business circles of Tecumseh, and we trust that he will find his residence here a pleasant one for both himself and his family. Mr. Cook will not entirely dissolve his business associations in Clinton, but will hereafter be known as a "buyer" upon the streets of both towns.

SEVERAL Tecumseh people will take in the one dollar excursion to Detroit to-day.

THE citizens of Adrian gave the Light Guard a banquet last evening at the Central Hotel.

COL. SUMNER SPOFFORD, of Des Moines, Iowa, is again shaking hands with his Tecumseh friends.

L. F. WHEELER gave the last of his "Illuminated Rambles" on Tuesday evening to a good house. It is certainly no flattery to say that he gives an interesting and instructive entertainment, and one which will bear comparison with many shows charging double the price of admission. We believe Mr. Wheeler has struck something which is destined to be a permanent success. Go in and win.

THE Reunion Association of Raisin Valley Seminary assembled last Friday afternoon and enjoyed a very pleasant meeting. Literary exercises were held according to previous announcement, and afterwards a collation was served beneath the shade of the old oaks on the lawn. We have obtained the manuscript of the poem delivered at the time, which our readers will have the pleasure of perusing next week.

CO. C HOME AGAIN.

Tuesday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, Capt. Lawrence, with his boys in blue, marched from the depot to the armory where they stacked arms and once more became private citizens. They had been in the service of the state nearly a week, having left home on Wednesday morning of last week.—They arrived in camp that afternoon and found it a beautiful location for the encampment. Comp. C ranked among the best drilled companies in the first brigade, and Capt. Lawrence is well pleased with the way the boys conducted themselves. Five days of soldier life, and the boys broke up and came home. The excursion trains on Sunday brought a large number of visitors, among whom were several Tecumseh people. Religious services were held on the ground at four o'cl'k in the afternoon, conducted by Rev Dr. Stocking, of Detroit. The boys were considerably "tanned up," on their arrival home, but their out-door life evidently agreed with them, and they all pronounce it the best and most enjoyable camp within their experience.

SEARCHING FOR BONES.

What the Adrian Scientific Society Found in Raisin.

About two years ago Henry L. Jone and Dr. E. Hause found and exhume quite a number of human bones section 12 in the township of Raisi Last week the Adrian Scientific Society sent a delegation to carefully explore the spot, and they succeeded in adding a number of relics to their previous collection. Excavations were made in a mound and over a surface about twenty four feet square. Their first find was a skull and parts of skeletons about fourteen inches deep. In another place a lower jaw was found. Four fragmentary skulls were discovered in another place. A few feet distant was the skull and skeleton of an adult, and also the skull and skeleton of a child. With these were found two pipes, a stone ornament and a piece of flint. In another place three skulls were found lying side by side. Numerous other fragments were found in different places, and several bits of charcoal. The society extend their thanks to A. Hanford, who owns the farm, and to Geo. Hawks, who lives thereon, for courtesies extended by them during the progress of the work.

TELEPHONE TALK.

Jerry Root and Geo. Stacy went to Milan to-day to work up a local exchange in that village.

Kies Bro.'s have subscribed for a telephone instrument, and they will be connected with the local exchange this week.

In addition to the club instrument at Clinton, J. S. Kies, Esq., has taken one for his individual use, which will be placed in his residence.

"Some important telephone results have been lately obtained by M. Van Rysselberghe, the Belgian meteorologist, whose ingenious meteorograph was shown at the Paris exhibition last year. He has succeeded in eliminating from telephonic communication through a wire the inductive action of a neighboring telegraph wire which gives a crackling kind of noise in the telephone. Moreover, he can employ the same wire at the same time for both telephonic and telegraphic work. Thus, in a recent experiment, a message was sent from Brussels by the Morse telegraph to the directing engineer of telegraphs in Paris, and an oral message sent by telephone was distinctly heard while the Morse receiver was in action. Paris is 213 miles of wire length from Brussels. Among other recent telephonic connections is Venice and Milan, 176 miles; Berlin and Hamburg, 278 miles; Paris and Dijon, 194 miles; Paris and Nancy, 219 miles. At the forthcoming exhibition in Munich telephony is to be tried between that town and Dresden, a distance of about 343 miles.

MR. FREDERICK BURGER, a brother of our townsman David Burger, arrived from Germany last week. He was just nine days making the journey.

L. F. WHEELER will give his "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands" at the Grange hall, Macon, on Monday and Tuesday evenings next, Aug. 21 and 22.

THE laborers on the new Lutheran church at Manchester, struck for higher wages last week, but were promptly discharged, and others hired in their place.

DR. E. C. ANDERSON, of Cleveland, Tenn., is enjoying Michigan air for a few days. He is well pleased with his location and prospects in Tennessee. He returns home next week.

Two men named Manlon and Maloy are in jail on a charge of complicity in a robbery at Kalamazoo. A few years ago Manlon was sent to state prison on Maloy's testimony.

THE Red Ribbon Club of Macon, have secured L. F. Wheeler's lecture, "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands" for Friday night, Aug. 18th. The lecture and pictures will be given in the Baptist church.

L. F. Wheeler will give his lecture, "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands," at the M. E. Church in Ridgeway, Wednesday and Thursday nights of next week, the 23rd, and 24th, for the benefit of the church.

As three ladies were driving near Dundee, Monroe county, the other day, their team walked off an embankment twenty feet high, the rig and occupants rolling to the bottom. Strangely enough no one was hurt.

IT has been our intention to send our horse, "Banker Rothchilds" away to be handled this fall, but owing to the wishes of the horsemen in this vicinity we have decided to keep him here for use this fall.

REYNOLDS & SILVERS.

NT.

AN excursion from Jackson to Put-in-Bay will pass over our road on the 29th of August. This will afford Tecumseh people a good opportunity to visit the land of grapes at a low fare.

WE learn that Wm. VanCamp, who was for many years in the dry goods business with Patterson & Co., and other firms in this village, and who moved to Sedalia, Mo., has decided to return to Michigan, and has taken a clerkship with James A. Eaton & Co., at Adrian, where he will be pleased to see all his old friends. We presume that his family will take up their residence in Adrian also.

CO. C AT CAMP JEROME.

EDITOR HERALD:—After a week, all too short, of profit and amusement from a military stand point, Company "C" has returned, and although she was not met by a band and welcomed home by a feast in the evening, under the direction of our prominent citizens, which was the reception tendered a sister company of Lenawee county, still we are proud of our company's conduct and bearing during all the time of her brief campaign, and the compliments she then and there received from our regimental officers show us boys that our efforts to have a company, and a good one too, in Tecumseh, have been crowned with success; and that this success has been attained by the untiring zeal of the officers and men of Company C, unaided by benefits, receptions and subscriptions of the Tecumseh citizens, is a fact worthy of consideration; and the honors won by our company belong alone to our "boys in blue."

A fancy drill will be commenced next Wednesday night, and all members are expected to be present. That our efforts in this direction will also be successful we do not doubt for a moment, as we all know the proficiency of our worthy and esteemed Captain in this direction, as well as in all other branches of military drill. The following resolution was passed by the unanimous vote of Company C the last afternoon in Camp Jerome:

Resolved, That we the officers and men of Company C, 1st Reg. M. S. T., as such, and as fellow citizens of Capt. C. M. Woodward, Asst. Surgeon, 1st Regt., would most heartily recommend to the consideration of the Colonel of this regiment the promotion of Capt. Woodward to the position of Surgeon of the regiment.

The efficiency and kind attention of Capt. Woodward to all who needed his services require no other comment.

THE T. & M. RAILROAD.

The following item in regard to the Toledo & Milwaukee railroad project is taken from the Free Press of Saturday last. Whether it is fact or fiction a month or two will reveal:

"Under the heading "Going for Vanderbilt's Territory," the Cincinnati Enquirer publishes the following dispatch bearing date of Cleveland, August 10: The active antagonism of the Seney syndicate to the Vanderbilt system of railroads is clearly indicated by the following statement, which is given on good authority:—"The Ohio and Michigan syndicate, which is largely composed of members of the Seney syndicate, has started and already got under way an important project in Michigan. It is proposed to construct a new line and fairly direct line from Toledo to Grand Haven, Mich., passing through the towns of Tecumseh, Marshall, Battle Creek and Allegan.

The new line will be about one hundred and eighty miles in length, and traverses what has already proved to be a rich country for railroads. The plans of this project are already well matured. Negotiations are favorably pending between the Ohio and Michigan Company, as the projectors of this new enterprise will be called, and the Chicago & West Michigan Railroad Company, owning about four hundred miles of road between New Buffalo and Pentwater, along the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, for a connection at Allegan and a general interchange of business at that point. This arrangement will make the Ohio and Michigan line the outlet for the large lumber traffic of the Chicago & West Michigan Road, which traffic will, of course, continue on its way east over the Nickle-Plate and Ohio Central. Arrangements have been perfected by which the Ohio & Mississippi Road will cross the Maumee over the Wheeling & Lake Erie bridge at Toledo. Of course the terminal facilities and dock front of the Ohio Central will be used by the new line at that point. Contracts for the construction of the new road have already been awarded, and work on the line is to begin immediately. Like nearly all other projects originated by the Seney syndicate, this new one dashes right into and through Vanderbilt territory. From Toledo to Jackson, Mich., it nearly parallels different branches of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, and twice crosses other branches of that road on its way to Grand Haven. The new line is an important one, not only as a feeder to the Ohio Central & Nickel Plate, but as adversely affecting the interests of the Lake Shore.

Pioneer Meeting.

The eighth annual county meeting will be held at Floral Hall, on the fair grounds, Friday, Sept. 1st, 1882, at 11 o'clock A. M. Picnic dinner at noon. Officers will be elected. Memorial names of departed pioneers will be read. Hon. G. W. Moore will read an outline history of Medina; also several others will address the meeting. A reminiscence of the Indians of this county will be read. A cordial invitation is extended to all, most especially to those who have resided in the state 25 years.

F. A. DEWEY, President.

S. C. STACY, Secretary.

MR. Z. C. WARREN, of Rutland, Vt., came in on the night train Monday and went to Sink's hotel. A moment after he stepped out the back door and went down an open cellar way headlong. He was much bruised about the head and shoulders, but Drs. S. & H. Catlin have been attending him with good results. He will depart for home to-morrow.

Mr. F. P. Bonner, of Meadville, Pa., writes: "I feel like a new-born creature. Transformed from a crabby dyspeptic and nervous sufferer to a robust, strong, healthy man, it all seems like a dream, yet Brown's Iron Bitters did it. I feel very kindly toward everybody, especially to the inventors of so good a medicine."

Deerfield Record: Dora, the eight years old girl of Dr. Yale, while playing in the doctor's buggy in the barn, Sunday, found and uncorked a bottle of chloroform, the fumes of which soon put her to sleep. When discovered she was very sick and she was with much difficulty brought out of the insensible condition, and did not fully recover from the effects of the drug for several days.

You never hear of a strike among the astronomers. Their business is always looking up.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Ley Poy Foom, the richest heathen in America, died in San Francisco the other day. He has a plantation in China stocked with 2,000 slaves.

In Jay Gould's new conservatory at Irvington are the rarest and choicest plants and flowers in this country, and many of the specimens are the only ones this side of the ocean.

The English medical writer, Dr. Gowing, thinks that epidemics are often spread by milk which before its delivery to consumers has been kept in vile places, where it has "licked up" infection from the surrounding atmosphere.

Philadelphia has a new branch of industry. It is the grinding of cocoanut shells into powder and mixing the same with pepper. The next thing will be to find a way to adulterate the cocoanut powder.

Gen. Sherman has placed upon the wall of his office in Washington a new picture—a fine water-color sketch of the union army crossing, by torch-light, the Big Black river, near Vicksburg. He considers it a remarkably faithful representation of one of the most memorable scenes of the war.

A ten-foot alligator killed near Butler, in Georgia, a few days ago, was found to have swallowed whole a small dog that had been missing for several days, and had besides in his stomach a large rock, a lightwood knot, and several sticks.

The new coal mines on Green river, Washington territory, have been pronounced superior to, and more extensive than, any other mines on the coast. There are prospects that they will soon be developed and connected with Seattle by a railroad.

M. Louis Figuier, a Frenchman, thinks science may be taught by the stage, and he has written half-a-dozen scientific dramas, in which steam engines, pumps and electric machines play a prominent part. The first play recently given, was a dull and tiresome affair.

While G. H. Elmore, of Albany, and others were fishing in Clark's pond, at Basloff's Bridge, N. Y., a few days since, they were attacked by a large water-snake, which attempted to enter their boat. The occupants fought the reptile with oars and fishing-rods, when it finally sank.

The deepest mine in the world, according to Professor H. Hofer, of the Academie Imperiale des Mines, is the Prizbram silver mine in Bohemia. The lowest depth is nearly 3,300 feet below the surface. At this depth the temperature of the rocks is only 75.20 degrees F., and the temperature of the air, according to the same authority, is 70.8 degrees. [illegible] ventilation has been required.

Frank Archer the celebrated English jockey, is described as a tall, emaciated, cadaverous man, with projected lips, a slight stoop, decidedly round shoulders, and long, misshapen legs. To keep his weight down to 117 pounds he often breakfasts on two seidlitz powders, eschews meat and vegetables, and subsists almost entirely upon bread and unsweetened tea. He is worth $350,000 though.

There are some people who think they make the most of life when they make it as wretched as possible. Lucretia once asked if an acquaintance of hers was not very disagreeable. "Well," was the reply, "she is always as disagreeable as the circumstances will permit."

Mr. Tulane, who recently gave $2,000,000 for the foundation of a university in New Orleans, is a Northern man, who rode into the Crescent City more than half a century ago in search of a modest business opening. He found what he was looking for, and retired with a fortune soon after the late civil war began.

Minnesota papers report that the fish hatchers in that State are very successful. The first experiments were made in 1847, under a ridiculously small State appropriation of $500, but three years later 257,000 fry were distributed throughout the State in the following proportions: Land-locked salmon from Maine, 7,750; yearling California salmon, 2,750; young fry California salmon, 147,100; shoal fry from South Hadley, Mass., 100,000.

The Bay Railroad running from Rochester, N. Y., to Lake Ontario, last Fall sank three wells, one 230, one 150 and one 100 feet deep, near its pavilion. No water was obtained, though the wells cost $1,200. They were all filled up, and so left all Winter. It is now found that much of the filling has been carried from the last well, and that it contains twenty feet of water. The phenomenon is considered inexplicable.

Two years ago Oscar Parker, of Granville, Vt., while drinking from a spring after dark, was disagreeably conscious of having imbibed something a little livelier than a hemlock twig and less pugnacious than a beetle-bug. Since then he has never enjoyed an entirely peaceful gastronomic conscience. A short time ago he gave himself into a physician's charge, and, after enduring medicinal torture for ten days, presented Esculapius with a striped snake twenty inches in length.

Dr. Adams, a prominent and wealthy physician of Denver, Col., made a singular experiment. Four years ago he found Gussie Rogers in a bagnio at Las Vegas, married her, educated her, and installed her as mistress of his elegant establishment in Denver. Though he was very kind to her and gave her plenty of money, she was incapable of reform. Her husband being compelled to get a divorce from her, she returned to her old life.

General Farm Notes.

It is not best to renew the orchard by planting young apple trees in the places made vacant by the decay and destruction of the old ones. To a certain extent the material needed for the growth of the apple wood has been extracted from the soil, and many of the enemies with which the apple has to contend have found a location there. It is better to supply a vacancy with a tree of some other fruit, or perhaps leave it vacant, and plant a new orchard in some other locality.

Care in chosing valuable varieties of fruit, in preparing the soil, in planting the trees, in cultivating and pruning them, in thinning the surplus off and in picking the fruit—all this goes for naught in the final outcome unless the marketing of the fruit is well done. Many a man toils hard the year through, and yet fails to reap his deserved reward because he has neglected the art of neat packing.

The observations of Dumas, Peyen and Boussingault have shown the fact that a cow gives healthy milk in exact proportion to the surplus of food beyond what is necessary for her own maintenance. If the animal is kept on food barely sufficient for proper nourishment, the milk produced must be at a loss of animal tissue, with general deterioration of the milk and also of the cow.

Two or three hives of bees can be kept as well as not on every farm, and with the present progress of bee keeping a large quantity of good extracted honey can be produced at a small expense, except for starting. With movable frames and a smoker, bees are as tractable as chickens, and comb foundation can be bought and placed in the hive and the bees can go right to work.

A novelty in the utilization of wire fences consists in insulating one of the continuous wires and connecting its ends with the opposite poles of a battery. Animals coming in contact with this wire will receive a shock from the electric current which will effectually debar them, it is said, from attempting to break down or override fences of this description.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

Elephants.

Col. Pollock, in "Sports in British Burmah," gives the following particulars about the elephant which will be new to most readers: "Elephants when asleep snore a good deal, and I have often seen them use a foot for a pillow, on which to rest their head. They are very human-like in many ways. They get a piece of wood and use it as a toothpick. They will plug a wound with clay. They scratch themselves with the tip of their trunk, and if they cannot reach the part, they take up a small branch and use that. As a rule, they are frightened at fire; but an elephant of the battery at Assam used to help put out fires, and she would do what I never saw any other animal of her kind do, and that was, after a fallen buffalo's throat had been cut through all but the vertebrae, when told to do so she would put her foot on the neck, twist her trunk round the horn, and hand it up. Some few of them will hand up birds after being shot, but they don't usually like touching dead bodies."

Cairo, N. Y.—Charles Hoffman, of this place, says: "I have used for a year or more Baxter's Mandrake Bitters and find they have been very beneficial to me, in fact cured me of Dyspepsia in its worst form." Isaac Hoffman and Frank Rennie have also been cured of Sick Headache and Dyspepsia by their use. Westel Salsbury says they have been used by himself and family to great advantage; have cured his daughter of Sick Headache. The Bitters seem to be just the medicine for the diseases for which they are recommended.

About Peanuts.

For the ten years 1870-1880, the peanut crop in this country was 8,100,000 bushels—4,200,000 from Tennessee, 3,200,000 from Virginia, and 700,000 from North Carolina. The crop last year was 2,220,000 bushels, and the average price was 7 cents per pound, twenty-two pounds to the bushel. It is the retailer that makes the money. Peanuts are sometimes as low as 3 or 5 cents a pound, but the consumer finds no abatement in the price of his measure of nuts. At 7 cents a pound, a bushel will bring $1.54, which, peddled out at 10 cents a pint, brings in $6.40, or at 5 cents a pint $3.20—a fair profit to the curbstone dealer.

Kills the Pleasure.

Illness in the house affects the whole family in some manner. When the sickness is serious the children's laughter must be hushed, footsteps must be softened, all goes sadly and wrong.—Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" stands in your doorway and says to sickness: "keep out!" It will cost you only a Dollar to put the sentinel on duty, and for his faithfulness thousands can vouch. Ask your druggist, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

The Height of Folly.

To wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, is the height of folly, when you might be easily cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known sickly families made the healthiest, by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

WARNER'S
CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within, its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures while the unparalleled demand with which it is attended is at once as the greatest medicine and the best salve for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, ERYSIPELAS, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every tissue, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

WHAT HAPPENED TO MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

Stone in the Kidney Expelled after Using Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" About two Weeks.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1871, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" —experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "I will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. The "Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York.

Jim Bennett on a Tare.

How the Editor was Surprised at His Own Machinery.

An amusing story has found its way from the very foundations of the big white building, corner of Ann street and Broadway up into the clubs along Fifth avenue, James Gordon Bennett being the hero. It has been dished up by the Sunday Mercury. This incident is alleged to have occurred only a few days previous to his departure for Europe in his new steam yacht. Mr. Bennett had been jaunting around town all day and was in good spirits. He visited numerous aristocratic resorts, talking "steam gear" and "yachting" and toasting the success of his new craft until late at night. By this time he began to feel, as his club friends put it, "hang up." He secured the company of a friend and made a regular round of the city in a close-covered carriage that was hired for the occasion. At last hours of early morning rolled in upon them. "Jim" began to fall back on his old hobby of journalism, and wound up by inviting his friend to go down with him and see "the greatest newspaper in New York go to press." The driver was then told to whip his horses post-haste down to the corner of Ann street and Broadway. Soon the carriage rolled up to the basement entrance to the press rooms, on the Ann street side. "Jim" and his friend wandered down into the depths of the concern and appeared unexpectedly among the small army of pressmen and feeders. A stir of excitement resulted, and in a moment the words passed from mouth to mouth, "Here's the Governor!" Mr. Bennett, startled at hearing the sudden clash of the immense machinery as the presses started, demanded the noise to be stopped. The foreman hastened to ascertain the cause of this interruption. Seeing the proprietor of the concern, he gave notice to stop until the wishes of Mr. Bennett could be heard. Then the jolly editor said: "Mr. Foreman, I want you to stop all this work and bring your men up before me until I speak to them." "But the paper is just going to press," put in the man, fearing valuable time might be lost in getting out the sheet. "I am the proprietor of this paper, and you will obey my orders," sharply retorted Mr. Bennett, who then got up on a feeder's platform and began to address the assemblage. He began questioning the men about some details of their business, the foreman then saw that if Mr. Bennett was allowed to continue occupying his men's time for once the paper would not be issued in season to compete with its rivals. He approached the editor's friend, and quietly asked that gentleman to suggest to the speaker to "let up." When the editor's friend did this demurely, instead of "Jim" taking the civil hint he only became more rampant, asked the men if they had celebrated Decoration Day. Then he shipped out a roll of bills from his pocket, and calling each man up before him with a ten or a five dollar note with the exclamation: "Here, go and have some fun and take a little rest." Already the paper was behind time half an hour, and the foreman begged Bennett's friend to take him from the place. At last, after the utmost exertion, "Jim" was got down from the platform, and the presses again started, while the editor and his friend made their way from the vaults, "Jim" exclaiming as they retired: "What a d-- noise those things down there make. But they send out the papers, I tell you, all the same, for the New York Herald is the grea"— and as he half finished this latter oft repeated sentence he dropped back in the corner of the carriage, his heels on the window sill, whilst the noise of the vehicle drowned his voice in their rapid flight for the northwest corner of Twenty-first street and Fifth avenue.

Found Him.

M. Quad, in one of his letters, says: Down below Montgomery I ran across a man from Port Huron, Mich., and after we had shaken hands, he said:

"Seen any rebs down here?"

"Why, yes. That is, I have seen hundreds who were in the Confederate army."

"But have you come across one who hasn't surrendered yet—a real old unterrified who wasn't licked and still hates the flag?"

"No."

"Well, I wish I could see one. I've been down here two weeks and I haven't seen one across him. I thought the South was chuck full of such chaps, and I doted on an interview."

I went up to the hotel and told the boys, and they sent over to the cooper-shop for Sam. He was not in the war at all, having lately removed in from Texas, but he was the most "rebbish" looking man south of the Ohio river.—He had long hair, long, matted whiskers, a long, sharp nose, eyes like a wolf, long arms, ragged clothes, and he looked to be a tough case. The boys told him what was wanted, and he walked down the street to a barber shop where the Port Huron man was waiting to get shaved. Standing in the middle of the shop he threw his old hat down, jumped three feet high and cracked his heels, and yelled out:

"Whoop—yah! Whar's that Yank who's been hanging around this town for three days? Whoop—yi! yi! durn Uncle Sam fur an old buzzard! I fit with Wheeler, I did, and I never surrendered! There ain't Yanks enough in North America to walk me off—whoop!"

The man from Port Huron had finally got what he was looking for. He rose up and was edging for the door, when Sam jumped for him and yelled:

"Whoop-ee! You're the cantankerous invader I'm after. Come down here and burn our gins, will ye? Come down here and slay our—!"

Alas! The Michigander was on the full skip by this time. He took a straight road for the country, turning out for nothing smaller than a four-mule team. Next morning I received a telegram from him, dated at a town eleven miles off, asking me to pay his hotel bill and bring along his satchel.

It is well known that M. Legouve, who is such a master of reading, writes detestably—a hand like inky fly-tracks. A lady said, speaking of him to one of his colleagues: "Wonderful reader, M. Legouve, eh?" "Wonderful? I call him supernatural; he can even read his own handwriting!"

A Very Rich Newsboy.

"Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco and Kansas City morning papers!"

This cry has been heard on the streets of Denver for years. It is uttered by a square-built, smooth-faced, matter of fact looking man, whose voice has struck a certain pitch which has increased in force with long practice.

His name is Mykins, and he is without a doubt the richest newsboy in the United States. Mykins has discovered no gold mines; he is no bonanza king. He has made his money by selling papers at ten cents apiece and blacking boots at ten cents per shine. He invested his money in property in Denver and loaned it out on good security, and he is worth to-day from $40,000 to $50,000. A queer fellow is Mykins. Night and day he hawks his papers on the street. He knows just where a paper can be sold. He is at the depots at the right hours; he knows just when to go to the hotels, and he can spot a stranger on the street, and sell him a paper, while one is wondering what place he came from.

"Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco and Kansas City morning papers!" There the cry is heard where many people are gathered together, and there many dimes are raked in.

One day Mykins passed. "Do you see that newsboy?" said a gentleman to the man of news. He is worth $40,000."

"How does he make it?"

"He came here a few years ago and commenced selling Eastern papers and blacking boots. He averaged $10 per day at the former business and no inconsiderable amount from the latter. He invested his money and now owns several fine residences on Lawrence and Fourteenth streets, two or three of those Grant houses on Welton street, some fine property on California street, and besides has any amount of money loaned out at interest. He is a rustler, and will still black your boots for a dime—at least he would a few months ago."

The speaker led the way to the newsboy's stand. An old coal box near the corner of Sixteenth and Larimer streets, with a boot blacking chair and apparatus at one end of it, marked the place of business of a man who was worth enough to make him comfortable for a lifetime.

"Why don't you interview Mykins?"

But this was easier said than done. Mykins is evidently a man of sterling business principles. One dime realized from the sale of one paper is evidently more to him than an hour's conversation with the most interesting gentleman in the world.

He did not desire to tell anything about his business.

Yes, he sold a good many papers.

Sometimes he had a boy to help him.

He had been here several years—yes.

Most of these papers are shipped through to Mykins direct. They cost him from two to four cents. He sells them for ten cents a number. He prefers to peddle them on the street, and doubtless has found that the most profitable manner of conducting his business. He knows the value of his trade and that small businesses are often more profitable than large ones. By careful attention he has worked up a line of customers to whom he delivers papers at fifty cents per week.

Mykins is unmarried. He looks like the hard-headed business man that he is. His face is bronzed by exposure to the sun and rain. His features are sharp. His voice is as harsh and piercing as years of continued exertion in one strain can make it.

"Some day," continued the first speaker, who started the train of thought about Mykins, "I should think he would want to retire from the bootblacking and news business and live on his riches."

Perhaps he may.—Denver Tribune.

The Pretzel.

This delicate fruit grows best in the shade, the shade of a beer garden being preferred. It is ripe at birth, and is ready to eat as soon as it is picked. In North Germany, where the benighted people do not know any better, the pretzel is called a "kringle." This is enough to spoil the pretzel, only that is impossible. The pretzel is always planted on free lunch counters. There is more nutrition in a barrel of sawdust than there is in a clothes basket full of pretzels. But then the pretzel is much the dryer of the two. The genuine pretzel has a heart like a marble-yard, and the hide is varnished to keep it dry. It is varnished with hot lye, and sprinkled with salt and aniseseed to give it tone.

Before it assumes the expression so familiar to the lovers of this perennial fruit, the pretzel is about the size of a garter snake. After it is tied up in that intricate knot which makes the eater wonder where to take his first bite, no man can guess at its length. Enough is known, however, to warrant scientific authorities in saying that if a man should swallow a pretzel whole, and it should suddenly straighten out in him, it would kill him in a minute. It is not possible, however, for a man to eat a pretzel whole. You can eat all the rest of it, but while there is more hole than pretzel to begin with, yet the more you eat the pretzel the more hole there is left.—Burdette.

Salt for Cattle.

Farmers hold different opinions about the propriety of placing salt within reach of cattle at all times, but so many of our best class of farmers have practiced and approve of this plan, that it must be considered safe. Cattle must gradually become used to it, by having a little given them every day, for a month or so, and then placing it in a little box attached to the manger in the stable, where they can reach it at any time, or in a trough in pasture. If the animal has it always within reach, it will eat no more than is good for it. The gastric juice is supposed to get its chlorine from common salt, and it therefore plays an important part in digestion.—National Live-Stock Journal, Chicago.

Uncle Ike was one day riding a mule and had a little negro boy behind him.

"Tell you what, Unk Ike, 'possum mighty good thing," said the boy.

"'Specially when you get lots o' gravy wid him."

Uncle Ike was silent, but seemed restless.

"An' when you get some roasted 'taters to sop in de gravy," said the boy.

Uncle Ike used his whip with nervous energy, and the mule increased his speed to a gallop.

Business.

Business has its own peculiar pleasures. It provides us with occupation and an aim in life, and it also gives employment to others. One of the greatest enjoyments of the prosperous business man consists in being able to comfortably provide for the many employes in his house or manufactory. In doing this he is fulfilling his obligations to society; he becomes a useful and honored citizen; business to him is a real pleasure; he enjoys his successes, when they are fairly won, because he feels that he deserves them. When a business man has the right kind of purpose in life he always enjoys his occupation. He feels a just and worthy pride in his prosperity, he is pleased with the respect and gratitude of those whom he directs and controls in the management of his affairs, and he feels that in benefitting himself he is conferring a favor upon others.

The London Times says the English forces will not retire from Egypt and leave events to take their own course, and when the consent of Europe is necessary to sanction a course it will be invoked in a manner very different from that with which we have lately been familiar. A German organ says the interests of Germany are not menaced, and when they are, she will have time for resolution. Her only aim at present is European peace. The sultan's proclamation against Arabi declares him a religious rebel.

De Lesseps has telegraphed to Constantinople that the whole of Egypt has embraced the cause of the national party, and that the English will find everywhere a determined opposition. The rebels at Ramleh made a forward movement Tuesday, but were repulsed by shots from the British iron-clad Temeraire. Lord Beresford has been promoted to the rank of captain for services during the bombardment of Alexandria. Thirty-seven battalions of English militia have volunteered for active service in Egypt. Gladstone states that arrangements have been made to prevent the telegraphing of information to Arabi Pasha from England. A cable is being laid from Alexandria to Port Said.

Preparations are making in England for the sending to Egypt of additional troops. The Second battalion of royal Irish foot, 775 strong, left Friday. Lieutenant General Sir J. M. Adye will command the land forces in Egypt until Sir Garnet Wolseley arrives. The main body of British troops will remain on board the transports until his arrival. A submarine cable has been laid between Alexandria and Port Said. H. M. S. Superb fired on the men of Arabi Pasha engaged in constructing earthworks. De Lesseps' conduct is causing complications. A favorable result of the negotiations for an Anglo-Turkish military convention is expected. A holy war is being preached in Morocco.

August crop returns to the department of agriculture from about 6,000 correspondents throughout the crop-producing area of the United States give a generally favorable report. During the month of July cotton has improved. The condition of spring wheat August 1 was higher than for several years. It is thought probable that the combined spring and winter wheat will, without loss from sprouting, reach 500,000,000 bushels, and that estimates assuming 15 to 20 per cent. more are wild assumptions to reduce the price of wheat in the hands of farmers. The European outlook is favorable for a medium crop, with a slight reduction in quality. The condition of the corn crop in the United States is represented 83, as against 77 last year. The general average condition of other crops is good.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

Exports of petroleum for the twelve months ended June 30, 1882, were $51,222,706.

Mr. J. Stanley Brown, the private secretary of President Garfield, has gone West, with the hope of gaining health and strength. Mr. Brown is a very popular young man here, and his illness is regretted by all who know him.

Claims of army officers for longevity pay, under the "Tyler decision," will be settled in the order of their presentation. Hereafter none of this class of claims will be made special without further direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Secretary of the Navy has approved the design of the flag to be known as the "President's flag." It will fly from the mainmast of every vessel used by the President. The first one to be used will fly from the steamer Despatch, when the President leaves on that vessel for New York.

Col. Barr, Judge Advocate of the army, will resign his commission, giving as a reason that he cannot longer serve under Judge Advocate General Swaim, with whom personally he is not on the best of terms. However, he says he is not a candidate for the Assistant Secretaryship of War as reported. He will accept nothing more in the way of a government office.

Under an appropriation in the sundry civil bill, the Treasury Department will proceed as soon as possible to establish quarantine stations for imported cattle at Portland, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Suitable buildings for the purpose will be provided at the expense of the government. The Treasury Cattle Commission, in consultation with the collectors of the various ports, will be charged with the duty of selecting suitable sites and recommending the best and most economical methods of providing the necessary buildings at each of the ports.

A somewhat spirited correspondence is passing between the postal authorities of Great Britain and the United States with regard to the stoppage and delivery of certain mail matter. It appears the British authorities not only prohibit the circulation through the mail of certain American newspapers inimical to the interests of that government, but that registered letters and packages suspected of containing seditious information and dangerous preparations are interdicted by the same authorities.

Now that the Census Office has been given the necessary money to complete its publications they will be pressed to a speedy conclusion. The compendium is expected to be out in about eight weeks. Most of the tables are ready for the printer and copy can be supplied as fast as the compositors need it. The force in the Census Office is now reduced to about 270 clerks; but the mass of the work is completed and the clerks that are left are experienced and efficient persons, who are able to do now as much as could be expected of twice the number at first.

To correct a loose statement which has gone out from Washington in various shapes, it is perhaps worth while to say that a vote of thanks to a speaker of the House is not usual at the end of the first session of a Congress. Thanks are reserved for the close of a term. The only instance within recent years when thanks have been tendered the presiding officer of the House at the expiration of the first session of a Congress was in the case of Milton Sayler, of Cincinnati, who was acting as Speaker pro tem. He was functus officio at the end of the first session, and therefore got his thanks then.

It is believed in legal circles that it will take about a week yet to get a verdict in the star route cases. Some of the leading local lawyers who have watched the trial closely do not anticipate that the jury will find the defendants guilty, but rather that a verdict just the opposite will be rendered. The evidence adduced by the government was surprisingly weak, but was materially strengthened by the testimony of some of the witnesses put on the stand by the defense. It is the general talk about the court-room that the defense would have been stronger and the side of the government weaker if the former had allowed the case to go to the jury without calling any witnesses. The tilts between the opposing counsel have engendered a very bitter per- [illegible] lawyers employed, and if one of those employed by the government carries into execution privately uttered threats Colonel Robert Ingersoll is going to get a good thrashing, and will be knocked out of time in two rounds of three minutes without gloves.

CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.

There are several Congressional committees which will meet during vacation. The Committee on American Shipping will be here to organize this week, and will probably arrange to hold its first business meeting in New York about Nov. 15. The Ways and Means Committee has leave to sit beginning the second Tuesday in November, by which time it is expected reports from the Tariff Commission will begin to come in on which that committee expects to go to work. The Printing Committee has leave to sit during the recess and will consider how best to curtail the government printing expenses by the reduction of the number and character of documents published by authority of Congress. The House select committee on the work of improvement of the Mississippi River will meet after the November elections at Cairo and will thence proceed down the river to examine into the progress and character of the work.

THE CHINESE RESTRICTION.

The Treasury Department has received a communication from Collector Webster, of Baltimore, Md., asking for instructions relative to the landing of a party of Chinese laborers from Cuba en route to San Francisco, and thence home. Acting Secretary French in reply informed him that the Chinese bill positively prohibits the entry of Chinese at any of the ports of the United States, and directed Collector Webster to refuse the privilege of landing this class of passengers at Baltimore. It is stated that there are between four and five hundred Chinese on board the boat whose captain made the request, and according to his orders from the department, Collector Webster will decline to accommodate the captain. The vessel will have to leave the port, and the cargo of Mongolians will probably have to make a sea voyage to San Francisco instead of going overland through the United States. During the last session of Congress Senator Logan advocated an amendment to the Chinese bill providing that Chinese desirous of returning home should not be excluded from landing at ports in this country to secure transportation to the Pacific slope, but the amendment failed to receive the approval of the majority of both Houses, and consequently the Chinese must find some other route to expedite their return to the flowery kingdom. Two requests of the same nature as that made to Collector Webster have been decided adversely by the Treasury Department, and it appears that the law is to be rigidly enforced.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

The White House is a good deal of a "Whited Sepulchre" just now, at least so far as life and activity is concerned, most of the clerks there employed having arranged to avail themselves of their leaves while the President is absent. Mr. C. M. Hendley, executive clerk has left for Lake George, and Mr. Crook, the disbursing officer, for Loudon County, Virginia, where he will remain for a couple of weeks. Messrs. Phillips and Pruden, private secretary and assistant private secretary, will remain here in charge of the White House during the absence of the President. The private part of the house will undergo a complete renovation, although there will be little refurnishing. The usual double coat of white paint, elegantly denominated by the citizens the "annual white-washing," will be applied to the exterior. After repeated efforts on the part of successive Commissioners of Public Buildings, Col. Rockwell succeeded in securing from Congress this year an appropriation for concreting the roads leading through the grounds. These drives are now of gravel, and caused much annoyance last year while the President lay sick by the sounds which they gave out under carriages. In winter they are [illegible] ruts of mud. They will be concreted this summer. Under the provisions of the executive bill the salaries of J. S. Batway, Walter Duke, Charles Loeffler, the President's doorkeeper, and Alexander Powell, the President's messenger, were raised. All except Powell were old employes at the mansion.

FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in a statement in regard to the foreign commerce of the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, says:

The total value of the foreign commerce of the country during the year, embracing both imports and exports of merchandise and specie, amounted to $1,560,456, as against $1,673,024,318 during the preceding fiscal year, showing a falling off of $108,134,962. The value of the exports of domestic merchandise from the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, amounted to $733,[illegible], as against $883,925,947 during the preceding year, a falling off of $150,[illegible]. The only commodity the value of the exports of which exhibited an increase of any considerable magnitude was petroleum. During the eleven months ended May 31, 1882, the value of the exports of petroleum amounted to $[illegible] as against $34,762,341 during the corresponding months of the preceding fiscal year, showing an increase of $11,860,801.

The value of the imports of merchandise into the United States during the year ended June 30, 1882, was larger than during any previous year in the history of the country. The value of the exports of merchandise from the United States during the last fiscal year exceeded the value of imports of merchandise into the United States by the sum of $235,727,856. This excess of the value of the exports over that of the imports of merchandise was less than during any preceding year since the year ended June 30, 1875.

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, the value of the exports of gold and silver coin and bullion amounted to $49,412,576 as against $19,406,847 during the preceding year, an increase of $30,005,729, and the imports thereof amounted to $42,472,390, as against $110,575,497 during the preceding year—a falling off of $68,103,107.

There was during the fiscal year just closed an excess of exports over imports of gold and silver coin and bullion amounting to $6,940,186, as against an excess of imports over exports during the preceding year of $91,168,650.

THE COMING NATIONAL FAIR.

Colonel Corbin, Secretary of the Garfield Monument Association, has sent out the following circular: "The Society of the Army of the Cumberland, through its Garfield Monument Committee, have determined to give, under provisions of a joint resolution of Congress on Aug. 5, 1882, a National fair and bazaar industrial and art exposition to be holden in the rotunda of the United States Capitol in the city of Washington, D. C., commencing on the 25th day of November, 1882, and to continue until the 3d day of December, 1882, its object being to raise the greatest possible amount of funds to aid in the erection of a statue at Washington to the memory and honor of the late President, James A. Garfield. The general plan of the project will be inaugurated and carried forward under the following management: A board of control, to consist of the Garfield Monument Committee of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland as now organized, and they shall be charged with the general organization; a board of direction, consisting of thirty, from which there shall be an executive committee of seven members, who shall have immediate control and direction of the fair during its organization and continuance, with power to determine and nominate the personnel of such sub-committees as may be required; a board of commissioners, to consist of six members from each State, three of whom shall be resident in the District of Columbia and three in each of their respective States, the three resident commissioners to constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. It shall be the duty of the State Commissioners to solicit exhibits and contributions from their several States and to invite and awaken a lively interest among their people in the success of the work and to look after the interest and well-being of such of their constituents as may be interested. Timely arrangement will be made at general headquarters for the receiving and forwarding of such exhibitions as may be offered and when placed on exhibition will, excepting perishable articles, remain from the opening to the closing of the fair, and shall, when it is so desired, bear the name of the maker and in all cases will be disposed of by sale, or such other process as the judgment of the Board of Directors shall decide, for the benefit of the monument fund; a board of award, whose duty it shall be to examine and report upon the various exhibits, awarding medals, and such honorable mention as in their judgment may be deemed, and give suitable engraved certificates of the same, according to the rules and regulations adopted and observed at the Centennial Exhibition of 1876 at Philadelphia.

CONGRESSIONAL

SENATE.

AUG. 7.—The senate passed bills to pension the widow of General Ransom, to repeal the export tax on tobacco, to allow employes of the senate an extra month's pay, to appropriate $40,000 to supply the deficiency in fees of district attorneys, to convene a court of inquiry as to the loss of the Jeannette, to create a select committee upon American ship-building, and to bridge the Mississippi by the mouth of the Upper Iowa river. In offering a concurrent resolution for final adjournment at 5 o'clock, M. L. Plumb charged the length of the session upon the dilatoriness of the house in maturing the appropriation bills. Mr. Brown offered a resolution of thanks to John F. Slater, of Connecticut, for donating $1,000,000 to the cause of education in the south. A resolution was adopted for an investigation into labor strikes. Mr. Cameron moved to amend the house resolution for final adjournment by making the hour 11 P. M. As no quorum voted, adjournment to Tuesday morning followed.

AUG. 9.—In the senate, Mr. Windom submitted a report in regard to the use of money to defeat the bonded spirits bill. A bill was passed to transfer to the Garfield Memorial hospital certain property of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' home. Mr. Pendleton secured the adoption of a vote of thanks to the presiding officers. Hon. David Davis, Messrs. Anthony and Bayard were appointed a committee to notify the president that the senate was ready to adjourn. A request by Mr. Morrill that the tax bill be passed by unanimous consent was received on the democratic side with derision, and the senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE.

AUG. 7.—Business in the house opened with an attendance of twelve members, which ultimately increased to 109. Concurrence was given to the senate amendments to supplemental post-route bill, and the speaker affixed his signature to the sundry civil bill. Mr. Cox introduced a bill to abolish the licenses on commercial travelers. Mr. Burrows reported a resolution, which was adopted, appropriating $5,000 to enable a select committee of nine members to examine and report upon the Mississippi improvements below Cairo, including the outlet and jetty systems. The bill to charter the Baltimore and Ohio Cable company was passed. By a vote of 48 to 49, the bill to quiet the title to the arsenal grounds in South Washington was defeated. After two recesses had been taken, in the hope of ending the session, the house adjourned to Tuesday morning.

MACON CENTER.

About half of the wheat crop hereabouts was out in the recent flood; that portion well shocked and capped not materially injured, but a large proportion was in bad condition, some in open shock and a portion horribly stacked before the rain with a view of early threshing is badly damaged, say about one-fourth of the entire crop.—Wheat is yielding about 20 bushels per acre. Oats a light crop. Corn is doing well. Potatoes good. Apples and peaches 'nix'.

An exchange says: "Those who find their houses infested with carpet bugs will be glad to know that naphtha will destroy them. It is an effectual remedy if thoroughly applied. This pest will no doubt cause great annoyance for some time to come as it seems to have found a lodgment in nearly every dwelling. It can only be eradicated by a careful and frequent extermination of articles upon which it feeds, and killing the vermin by the use of naphtha, or some other equally efficient preventive. Its ravages are not confined to carpets. It is just as destructive to all kinds of woolen goods, silks and furs, and if not removed will ruin them in a very short time."

E. W. CHAPIN, of Jackson, will give an excursion over the Branch to Put-in-Bay on Tuesday next, Aug. 29th. Fare from Tecumseh only $1.80 for the round trip. This is the first and probably will be the only excursion to Put-in-Bay this season from here.

THE RAISIN VALLEY REUNION.

The Poem Delivered on That Occasion by Clara J. Hicks, of Oregon.

We embrace the opportunity this week of presenting to our readers herewith the poem of Miss Clara J. Hicks, which was read at the last reunion of the Raisin Valley Seminary Alumni. The poem is one of genuine merit and much above the average among literary productions of this character:

I send you greeting, school friends all, and may its good latent
Lose nothing in effect, that it must cross a continent!
Though mountain barriers threat'ning rise, and deserts lie between,
Though dusky canyons—gloomy depths—and torrents intervene,
The soul, triumphant over change, annihilating space,
Keeps still the glad reunion day in its accustomed place.

On each familiar face I note the artist life has wrought,
With skillful pencil added lines of character and thought,
While some new faces I conceive before whose eager eyes
The path of knowledge unexplored, but rich in treasure lies.

Enough of prelude you may well, with just impatience, say,
No place vain speculations find on this our gala day,
Leaving delusive visions, then, I venture on the hope
To win attention for a time to the Pacific slope.

* * * * * * * * *

Not with more splendor shone the sun
In tropic climes that day,
Nor ever blew more favoring breeze
To waft us on our way.

A merry crew whose only care
Was Jock, the setter brown,
Who would persist in frolics wild,
Though sternly ordered down.

Sportsmen were there, brave in gum boots,
And double-vizor caps
With hunting jackets, cartridge filled,
Game-bags and other "traps."

That each was owner of a gun,
The best was ever tried;
(God save the mark) in Oregon,
He was well satisfied.

Two manned the oars, one steered our course,
And other two there were;
Their special charge, the tempting lunch,
Guarding with jealous care.

Who oft as rose the sanguine talk
Of slain ducks would protest
'Gainst the atrocities called sport—
Ladies, they're thus confest.

How brightly rose thy dimpled waves
Willamette, unsung stream;
Hasten the day some poet shall
Do honor to the theme.

On sun-bright hill-tops autumn had
Her flaming signals hung,
And o'er the banks a gauzy vail
Of purple asters flung.

With tender tints of pink and cream,
Mingled snowberries white;
And from brown cliffs gay pennons swung,
Crimson and orange bright.

While here and there a sheltered nook
Its emerald tribute brought
Of fir and moss and waving fern,
With light and shade inwrought.

The Cascade giants white-linel rose
Against a sky of blue;
The city faded in our wake,
The islands came in view.

Swan Island! not ill-named was it
In the wild days of yore,
When stately swans in myriad flocks
Sought its delightful shore.

But now no more the graceful birds
Come there; and the gray goose,
The mallard, canvas-back and teal
Serve well the hunter's use.

And so our huntsmen, what avails
To trace their mazy way;
Enough to hear themselves recount
Adventures of the day.

When gathered round the evening fire,
In attitudes of ease,
Each hero told his conquests o'er
Of ducks and wary geese.

And Jock, poor dog, his untrained ways
Brought him disgrace that day;
He hung his head and silken ears
In deprecating way.

The while our host the merits of
His own two dogs extolled,
And many a marvellous exploit
In proof thereof recalled,

Not as in days of old romance—
A feudal despot crowned,
Intrenched in rocky battlements,
This island king we found.

Nor grim nor high his castle walls,
With rose and vine thick set;
The cheerful chimney smoke enwreathed
Their only minaret.

Within the long, low dark-ceiled room,
Despite its armoried wall
And ample hearth, looked even less
The old baronial hall.

Yet who shall say our generous host
Was not a kingly man;
Who better bears the name than a
True Oregonian?

The fertile acres stretching far,
Girdled with azure zone;
The herds by hundreds grazing there,
He called them all his own.

His wife, a queen in household arts
And hospitality;
His daughters, helpful maids, his sons
Manly, and strong, and free.

Versed in the wealth of knowledge they,
From nature's sources brought;
Their book-lore learned in city schools,
Their field-craft island taught.

Such strength and faith their mountains had
Inspired from earliest years,
As well befits the daughters and
The sons of pioneers.

Higher they piled the blazing fire
With torch-like fir, for still
How bright so'er the sun of noon,
The autumn nights are chill.

And as the wide-mouthed chimney drew
With unseen arms the blaze;
It played a rosy, flickering hue
On each reflective face

Flushing the baskets winy hoard
Of apples, red and fair,
Playing a roguish hide-and-seek
With every sober pear.

It lent weird interest to the tales
Our entertainers told
Of life and strange adventures in
The rugged days of old.

The toilsome march of caravan,
The desert plains across;
The hopeful ardor of all hearts,
Surmounting every loss.

How nature's smiles returned those of
The weary pilgrim band,
When first from mountain heights they gazed
Upon that promised land.

The fair, warm valleys far below,
In peaceful beauty lay;
The foot-hill wore perennial green,
The prairies rolled away.

And gleaming o'er the jagged wall
Of fir, majestic Hood,
Keeping his tireless vigil, seemed
A prophecy of good.

"Not all unfounded proved your faith
Courageous pioneers!
The cheerful toil of early life
Has blest your later years.

"Your mountains compact never broke
To send the needed rain;
Valley and plain gave no false hopes,
But yield the annual grain.

"The stately rivers bear with pride
The traffic of the seas;
Your enterprise crowned with success
Your opportunities.

"So shall your past achievements teach
How each of us may best
Build with large hope and purpose firm
The Empire of the West."

Thus spake one of our party, then
Noting the how, he found
We had just time, with haste, to reach
A steamer homeward bound.

Through the still night a warning shriek
Proclaimed her rounding to;
The large boat took aboard the swell—
Freight, passengers and crew.

Swiftly she cut the moon-lit waves;
Lights shown out, one by one,
From cities two, above, below—
Our holiday was done.

Blissfield Advance: On Tuesday morning last Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Miller, Miss Stella Miller and Mr. Frank Lewis, departed on the Lake Shore road for Detroit, to attend rehearsals of the new comedy entitled "Brother Gardner and the Lime Kiln Club."—Shortly after leaving the village Miss Stella Miller, was startled by the frantic actions of a young man in the seat behind her, endeavoring to pull the cushions from under her, insisting that the car was on fire. Upon arising, Miss Stella's dress was discovered to be on fire, having burned quite a hole in the back. The passengers soon succeeded in suppressing the flames, and had it not been for the prompt alarm given, serious and probably fatal results might have followed.

Kidney Complaint is a miserable, weakening disease; pains in the small of the back; strange, indescribable feelings in the back and sides; the least exertion wearies: a show of brick dust or albuminous matter in the urine or lack of it; breath short; sharp and darting pains about the vitals, and dropsical swellings, are certain evidences of diseased Kidneys. Kellogg's Columbian Oil cures this disease in all its forms, and your druggist is authorized to warrant all sold, and will refund the money in all cases that fail to give satisfaction.

Manchester Enterprise: The annual picnic of the Bridgewater farmers will be held at Shorts' grove on Saturday, August 26th, commencing at 10 o'clock, sharp. Revs. Payne, of Clinton, and Combs, of Manchester, will deliver addresses, while music will be furnished by both the glee club and brass band of the township. The invitation to "come out and bring your baskets, and have a good old time" is extended to all, but they don't say whether the baskets shall be filled, or not, however we are of the opinion that if they are not filled they will fill them for you, such is the hospitality of the Bridgewater people.

Her Own Experience.

"The friend of ours who recommended your 'Favorite Remedy' had herself suffered from a stroke of paralysis, which rendered her entire right side powerless, and, in a word, left her as helpless as an infant. But 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' cured her and she is now able to do her own work." The above is quoted from a letter from a gentleman in Elmira, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. You need a bottle in the house.

Clinton News: Last Sunday afternoon, as constable Burroughs and landlord Erskine were taking a ride, they overtook a man driving a team, whose conduct aroused the suspicions of Burroughs that the horses were stolen. Just after driving through the village taking the Saline road, Mr. Burroughs stopped the man, but after conversing with him, he concluded there was not sufficient ground for interference and let the stranger go.—Monday E. G. Cook received a postal card from Fulton county, Ohio, giving notice of a stolen horse and describing exactly one of the horses which the stranger was driving Sunday.

Adrian Press: Capt Case, of Cambridge, who must soon, we fear go "over the hills to the poor house" was so hard up that he was compelled last week to sell what little wool he had saved up for his wife to spin into stocking yarn next winter. He however had pressing present needs for a few dollars so he brought in a little jag of 4,000 pounds and will manage to skin along on the $1.400 he received for it, until next month when he will be able to scratch together a little wheat. It is very sad to think how destitute Uncle Case is getting.

TRYING TO BREAK JAIL.

The Attempt Frustrated by the Cool and Plucky Conduct of Deputy Sheriff Elbridge Hyde.

An attempted jail delivery last Saturday was very nicely nipped in the bud by Elbridge Hyde, the particulars of which are taken from the account in the Adrian Times:

The first work performed at the jail every Saturday morning is to scrub the floors of those parts of the jail occupied by the prisoners. The labor is performed by the prisoners, and is usually begun shortly after seven o'clock. On the first floor, where the attempt occurred, the interior apartment of the jail, where the prisoners are confined together during the day, and the cells, are first scrubbed. Afterwards the turnkey opens the corridor, surrounding this part of the jail, from the outside, and places the necessary brooms, water, etc., where they can be secured by the scrubbers, after which he opens the door and allows them to scrub the floor of the corridor first, however, securely fastening every avenue of escape from it. When the floor of the corridor has received the necessary attention, he goes within and locks the prisoners again into their interior domicile. Deputy Sheriff Hyde always performs this duty, and when he steps into the corridor, keeps a close watch on the prisoners for an outbreak, as this is about the only time when an attack has a show of being successful. The door leading from the corridor into the interior apartment is on the east side of the jail, and in order to lock it the turnkey must pass nearly around the building and along nearly the whole length of the corridor. In doing so he passes two corners which afford excellent opportunities for an attack.

This morning when Turnkey Hyde passed into the corridor he saw that about all the prisoners had already passed within, and made a little suspicious by their unusual alacrity, he was very cautious in turning the corners of the corridor. This caution probably saved his life. There are ten prisoners confined in this part of the jail, nine of whom are awaiting trial in circuit court for various offenses, mostly larceny and horse stealing, and a harder looking set would be hard to pick up. As he passed around the first corner he kept close to the outer wall, in such a way that he discovered one of the prisoners, who stood with an upraised club, in time to partially avoid a crushing blow, which the scroundrel aimed at him. Before the rascal had time to repeat it, he received a kick in the abdomen from the deputy's boot, which partially floored him, and before he could rise the official was upon him and had delivered several solid blows on his cranium.—Upon allowing him to rise, the prisoner again showed fight and was promptly knocked down, this time to stay. Deputy Hyde now secured the club, and forced the fellow into his cell, where he remains in solitary confinement. The plan of the escape had evidently been to disable or kill the turnkey at a single blow, delivered by the most daring and able-bodied man in the crowd, when all would easily have escaped over his body.

Who Should Pay for Sidewalks?

A writer in the Waterloo (N. Y.) News discourses upon the question of sidewalks after this fashion: A neighboring village boasts of a new charter, under which the corporate authorities will be enabled to compel property owners to put down sidewalks; and to keep old ones in repair, according to any ordinance in such case made. This may be well enough for the public, yet we fail to see any sound principle upon which this burden is imposed upon the owners of real estate, who otherwise pay much more than their equitable proportion of tax. The sidewalks along village streets are a part and parcel of the public highway, and as such are under the exclusive control of the public authorities. The adjoining proprietor has no more use of or benefit from the sidewalks, than from the center track of the street. The exclusive use in fact belongs to the public. The proprietor, in the ordinary method, has been assessed for the full value of his property, and paid tax thereon at the rate prescribed for other tax payers. Wherefore should he be compelled to pay another and extra tax? The expense of construction and maintaining is no inconsiderable sum, especially where the wooden superstructure is feloniously torn up in winter by "the public" and used for kindling wood! We would like some one learned in the philosophy of the law, to point out any principle upon which sidewalks exclusively used by the public, and controlled by the authorities, are not as legitimate matters of street expense as the remaining portions of the highway, and we call attention to the subject as another illustration of the inequitable taxation to which the owner of real estate are subjected.

The Letter From Over the Sea.

BY MARY D. BRINE.

Whether it be this gladsome day,
Whose perfect beauty lies
In a golden sheen on the ocean's breast
'Neath the laughing summer skies,
Whose sunbeams glisten and gleam and glance
'Mid the sleepy forest trees,
While the meadow grasses are hard at play
With the fragrant, frolicsome breeze;

Or whether it be the happy news
This day has given to me,
This treasure my hand and heart hold fast,
This letter from over the sea—
Oh, I've asked my heart a score of times
Why it has grown so gay,
Whether because of our precious gift,
Or because of the gladsome day;

And my heart has questioned of me as well
Wherefore my lips should sing,
And why to my eyes persistently
The happy tears should cling;
And here by the casement as I stand
In the breath of the flowers fair,
And the subtle fragrance of clover bloom
Filling the summer air.

With the sunbeams kissing my brow and hair,
And turning to shining gold
The words which come from over the sea,
The letter my hand doth hold.
We answer each other, my heart and I:
"Though the day be fair and bright,
You calling to breeze, my flower, my sun,
Do we care one week for delight?"

"But only to this, the precious gift
Which claims both heart and hand
And wooes as only love can woo,
Love only understand."
And thus it is that gladsome day,
With its joyous azure skies,
Its golden shadows, and merry breeze,
Seems perfect to my eyes.

We had not dreamed, my heart and I,
That there could such gladness be
As has come to us this cloudy day
In our letter from over the sea.
So shine, ye sunbeams, glisten and gleam,
And turn my letter to gold;
For hiding safe in its own white folds
A dear old story is told.

THEIR FIRST TIFF.

Only six months married, and this was their first tiff!

Not a very serious one, perhaps, but—like "the little rift within the lute"—who could say where it would end?

Six months ago Letty Chambers, a week old bride then, thought that the pretty little home about a dozen miles out of town provided for her by her husband, the snuggiest, cosiest of abodes. But as the days flew by, and she found herself alone from morn till eve, a little taint of discontent began to grow upon her. Gerald's business took him up to town each day, and it was dull times for Letty, more especially after she had made the acquaintance of a fashionable, worldy woman, whom her husband disapproved of, but who in Letty's innocent mind was all that was friendly and good-natured, so that when Gerald told her one morning that he objected to her intimacy with the gay widow—from whom the early post had brought an invitation for Letty to spend a day in town with her—the young wife pouted, and looked as cross as it was possible for her pretty face to appear, and attempted to gain her point by persuasion.

"It is not often that I go out, I am sure," she pleaded; "you might take me to town with you, Gerald, and bring me back in the evening."

But Gerald was inexorable.

"I would rather not," was all he said, but Letty knew that his "rather not" meant a decided negative, and the tears stood in her pretty blue eyes as she turned pettishly from his offered embrace, at which repulse Gerald, rather annoyed, took up his hat and walked to the door.

Letty followed him.

"Oh, Gerald, do let me go?" she said entreatingly, as she clung to her husband's hand, as they stood together on the doorstep.

"I don't think I can consent, dearie," said Gerald Chambers, looking down into her blue eyes.

"But, Gerald, Mrs. Merriton is so obliging, I should enjoy spending the day with her so much."

"My dear Letty," he said, in a pained voice, "don't urge me. I cannot have you under that woman's influence."

"No, you want me to poke here in the country all the time, while I just long for a sight of city streets and shops! you go up every day, and when I could go for a few hours, you won't let me!"

"If anyone else had invited you I would say yes, gladly, Letty. And now, see here, little woman, just be a good girl, and I'll bring you some good news when I come home to-night."

"No, you won't! And I don't want any, either! I just want my own way once in a while!"

"I think you have it generally now," said Gerald, gravely.

"I don't either! I used to at home, and I wish I had stayed there, I do!"

"Letty, if you are determined to quarrel I had better go at once," said Gerald, releasing his hand very gently from her hold.

"Well, go! And I don't care if you never come back! "snapped Letty, after him.

Gerald turned an instant, and said, sadly:

"Letty, you will be sorry for that before you see me again. Good-bye," and was gone.

Letty went into the house, just as the whistle of Gerald's train sounded. She was sorry now, and a little frightened at her angry words. But there was no time to tell him so, for he was gone.

"I know he was right, too," she said, penitently. "Mrs. Merriton is awfully fast—she does lots of things I wouldn't do. But it would be so nice to spend a day in town. Gerald is there all the time, and I get so lonely out here alone. It wasn't worth a quarrel with him, though. What did he mean by saying I would be sorry? I'm sorry now—I wish I did not have to wait until night to tell him so."

Near noon a bright thought came to her. She wanted to make some little purchases in town—why not go up by the 1.30 train, and come home with Gerald?

To resolve was to do, with Letty. At two o'clock she tripped into the office where Gerald was junior partner. The senior, Mr. Harper, was there alone.

"Where is Mr. Chambers?" asked Letty.

"He hasn't been here to-day," said Mr. Harper.

"Why, he came up by the early train," said Letty, slightly alarmed.

"I don't think he's been here. I'll ask Mr. Wright if he has seen him, though," said Mr. Harper.

He stepped to the cashier's desk, and presently returning, said: "Mr. Wright says he was here, very early, but said he was going away on business, and would not be in again to-day."

"Why, where can he have gone?" cried Letty, a cold thrill all over her. "He did not speak of it to me."

A clerk, passing by, stopped, that instant.

"Is it Mr. Chambers you are asking about?" he said.

"Yes. Have you seen him, Mr. Severn?"

"Yes, sir. As I came from dinner I met him walking very fast towards the depot. He said he was trying to catch the 12.30 train."

"Then I just missed him, coming up by the 1.30. How provoking!" said Letty.

But her fears were relieved, and she hurried through her shopping, so as to get home herself by the four o'clock train.

"I'm so sorry I wasn't there when he got home!" she said. "Never mind, I'll make it up when I do get there."

She had to wait a few minutes at the station for the train. She walked up and down the long platform, then ventured a few steps on the narrow plank laid across the long railroad bridge, for the convenience of foot passengers.

The conductor who ran down at four was the same who ran down at 12.30. Letty knew him by sight, and stopped to speak to him.

"Mr. Chambers went down with you at noon, did he not?" she said.

"Mr. Chambers has not gone to-day, yet."

"Oh, I'm sure he did!" insisted Letty.

The conductor shook his head.

"No, madam I know, because I had a message for him to-day, and I've been on the lookout for him, couldn't have gone down without my seeing him."

"Oh, dear. Severn, one of the clerks, told me he saw my husband running to catch the train."

"Saw him myself, madam, on the platform. But when I looked into the carriages, he was not there."

"And the last you saw of him was on the platform?" asked Letty, turning pale.

"Yes'm. But don't be uneasy. I dare say he went down by the 2.15."

"Perhaps he did," said Letty.

But her heart chilled as she sat and thought of Gerald, last seen on that crowded, bustling platform. Was it possible that he had met with an accident? Oh, Heaven forbid! He would not so punish her for one angry word. He must have gone down at two o'clock, and was waiting for her at home.

Half dead with anxiety, she left the train, and flew home. He had not returned, their little maid-servant told her. She flew back to the station, and asked the ticket collector if he had seen Mr. Chambers come down.

"No, ma'am, he hasn't come down yet," was the prompt answer.

Letty turned away. Her bitter punishment had come, then! Gerald was gone, never to return more, and her last words to him had been angry ones—her last words to Gerald, whom she loved far better than she did her own life.

She could scarcely support her limbs untill she got into the street once more.

Then her tears fell, and without heeding that some one might be passing, she wailed out.

"He'll never come again! Gerald will never come again! My Gerald never will come any more!"

"The dickens he won't!" sounded a cherry voice just behind her. Letty turned—caught Gerald's arm, then her overstrained nerves gave way. She turned whiter, gasped, trembled, caught her breath, and would have fallen in the street, but for Gerald's support.

"Come! come, little woman, this won't do!" he cried. "I don't know what the mischief is up, but we can't have any of this sort of nonsense in the public street, anyhow!"

"Oh, Gerald!" gasped Letty. "I thought you were killed!"

"Killed? Not if I know it! Who told you so, little woman, and scared you half to death?"

"Mr. Severn said he saw you on the way to the depot, and the conductor told me he saw you on the platform, but you didn't get in the train."

"No wonder. I wasn't in the train. I was in another one. Fact is, I went over to Brooklyn to look at a little house there, and I got in just a few minutes ago, from that end of the town."

"Oh, Gerald! If I had only known it! I was nearly crazy to-day."

"Oh, then you did care a little to have me come back?"

"Care? I think I did! Oh, Gerald, I'm so sorry I was so hateful this morning. Please forgive me. I've been punished enough to-day."

"Well, yes, I think you have, so we'll make it up. Now, pet, do you want to hear my good news?"

"Of course I do."

"Well, then, as I wouldn't consent to let you go to New York to visit Mrs. Merriton, how would you like to go and stay, in your own house?"

"Oh, George!" with a squeeze of his arm.

"Fact, little woman. I went to see the Brooklyn cottage, and it's a beauty—and so I bought it."

"Bought it? Oh, Gerald, you didn't, did you?"

"Well, I rather think I did! A little gem of a house, too. Ten rooms, gas and all modern conveniences, besides a basement. Price moderate, too. Think it will be big enough for us?"

"I know it will! Oh, I'm so glad! But—could you afford it, Gerald?"

"Yes, very well, or I should not have purchased it. To-morrow we will go up and look at it, and if it pleases you we will arrange to move up at once."

"I know it will please me," said Letty; and in her thankfulness that Gerald was not taken away from her, she resolved that she would never again speak a hasty, angry word.

Death of George Washington.

"When did George Washington die?" asked an Austin teacher of a large boy.

"Is he dead?" was the astonished reply. "Why, it is not more than six months ago that they were celebrating his birthday, and now he is dead. It's a bad year on children. I reckon his folks let him eat something that didn't agree with him."—Texas Siftings.

Many Boston bakers, it is said, owing to the high price of lard, are using cotton-seed oil in its place. Lard costs them 13½ to 15¾ cents per pound; cotton-seed oil, 8½ cents.

Buying a Carpet in Egypt.

How Arthur Sullivan Did It.

Arthur Sullivan bought a carpet in Alexandria, and the purchase took him three months. One morning, so runs Dr. Sullivan's narrative, he was passing by one of the bazaars where tapestries and such things are sold, when a particularly handsome and rich fabric caught his eye. He went in, and, after pretending to look over a lot of things which in reality he did not want, he said to the man who solemnly presided over the place, "And what is the price of that carpet?"

"That," responded the dealer, "is not for sale. I purchased that particular carpet at a great cost, to feast my own eyes upon. It is magnificent—superb. I could not part with that. No, by Allah!" or words to that effect. "Will the English gentleman have a cup of coffee?" The Englishman would. He would also have a cigarette. After that he went away. In a day or two he went around again, and once more made the pretense of looking through Macdallah's stock. He had previously failed to fool the sly Egyptian before as to the article he really wanted, so he took more time to it on this occasion. As he expected, the sedate owner of the bazaar approached him:

"I have concluded, after several sleepless nights," said the merchant, "to part with that carpet. It grieves me very much to do so, for I have become very fond of it. I had hoped that it would be the light of my eyes in my old age. But the prophet has counseled unselfishness among his people, and I will sell to the English gentleman."

"How much?"

"One hundred pounds."

"Nonsense. I'll give you £5."

The Egyptian's dignity was obviously wounded. An expression of absolute pain crossed his face. But he forgave Dr. Sullivan, and they had another cup of coffee and a cigarette together. Then Dr. Sullivan went away, as before. In a week or so he dropped around again. After going through the regular business of looking over the stock, he was again approached by Macdallah.

"I have concluded, after much thought," said that worthy, "that I asked you too much for the carpet the other day. When Macdallah feels he is in the wrong, he is quick to acknowledge it. The English gentleman can have the beautiful carpet for £90."

"Now you acknowledge your error," replied Mr. Sullivan, "I will confess that I was wrong in offering you only £5 for your carpet the other day. I did that in joke, of course. I didn't mean it. Bless you, no. And since you are prepared to make concessions, I will do the same. Instead of $5, I'll give you £6."

More coffee and another cigarette. The next time Dr. Sullivan went around, the merchant took off £5 more, and the purchaser added £1. So it went on, with haggling and coffee, until Dr. Sullivan had finally agreed to give £12, at which price he took away the carpet. It would have cost about $250 in London. He says that the kind of business mentioned is considered the strictly proper thing in Egypt and Turkey. But Americans, he adds, are spoiling the trade in this direction. While he was in Alexandria a gentleman named Morgan, from New York, came along and visited the bazaar of Macdallah. Three carpets struck his fancy and he priced them. "Three hundred pounds," said Macdallah. "Well," replied Mr. Morgan, "that seems a fair price, and I'll take them. Here's your money." The next time Dr. Sullivan saw the merchant he was almost tearing his hair with rage against the "dog of a Christian." He explained the matter in an injured tone to the sympathizing Englishman, adding that Mr. Morgan's method was not "business."—Boston Herald.

Coloring Artificial Butter.

From recent investigations in New York it appears that oleomargarine is not palmed off on the public as genuine butter so much by manufacturers and jobbers as by the retailers. These are tempted to the deception by the large profit made by selling oleomargarine as butter. Thousands of pounds of artificial butter which cost the grocer 17 or 20 cents per pound, are sold at 35 to 40 cents. The butter trade does not object to competition with "bull" butter, for it says if people want it let them have it. The whole trouble seems to be that the stuff is sold to consumers as the genuine article. Oleomargarine in its natural state is perfectly white, and could never be passed off as butter were it not for the use of artificial coloring. This serves to disguise it from any one but an expert. If a tub of olemargarine is placed beside one of genuine butter of poor quality, and an intending purchaser tastes the two, he is likely to prefer the former unless of its character. The grocer does not go out of the way to inform him, and he is thus made the victim of a negative deception.

Gov. Cornell vetoed a bill which prohibited the coloring of artificial butter or cheese on the ground that it interfered with certain patents granted by the Federal Government which secured to the patentees the right to color their artificial products. It is difficult to see upon what ground a patent is defensible which grants to an individual or company the right by artificial means to sell a spurious article as genuine. The patent to the makers of oleomargarine was to protect in the manufacture of an article which should be an equivalent of butter, but not to protect them in swindling the public into buying it under the impression that it is the genuine article.

All efforts to protect the public from fraudulent imposition in buying oleomargarine must prove futile so long as the genuine cannot be readily detected from the spurious. The profits of the deception are too large for the conscience of the average grocer or retail provision merchant.—Chicago Herald.

Domestic Recipes.

Gateaux Madeleines.—One pound of sugar, sixteen eggs, half pound of butter three-quarters pound of flour. Beat the sugar and the eggs together in a bowl. When done, mix in the flour, then the butter. Put the paste in small moulds, and bake in a warm oven.

Tin Wedding Cake.—Rub one cup of butter and three of sugar to a cream; add one cup of milk, four cups of flour, five eggs, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, half teaspoonful of soda, one-fourth pound of citron. This makes two loaves.

Albany Breakfast Cakes.—Six eggs, one quart of milk, a teaspoonful of salt, a piece of saleratus the size of two peas, and sufficient flour to make a thick batter. Beat the eggs very light, and stir them into the milk; add the salt and saleratus, dissolved in a little hot water. Stir in sufficient flour to make a thick batter, rub some small tins the size of a tea saucer with butter, and half fill them with the batter. Bake them in a quick oven half an hour.

Veal Loaf furnishes a good relish for supper. Take two pounds of veal and chop it very fine, about as if for mincemeat; two coffee cups of fine bread crumbs, two eggs well beaten, a teaspoonful of salt with black pepper mixed with it, a little sifted sage, or any other leaf you choose, and a lump of butter to suit your taste. Beat these all together in the chopping-bowl, and put in an earthen pudding-dish, well buttered; press it down very hard. Bake in a hot oven for an hour. Let it get perfectly cold before you attempt to cut it; then it will be possible to cut it in thin slices.

String Beans.—This delicious vegetable is rarely properly cooked. When well prepared it is quite as healthful as peas. Take the pods as fresh and young as possible, and shred them as finely as a small knife will go through them, cutting them lengthwise, and, as it were, shaving them very thin. Put into salted boiling water and boil two hours. Then drain in a colander, and serve with plenty of sweet butter, and they will be as delicate as peas. If one likes vinegar, a little of it will improve the dish.

Creamed Cabbage.—Slice as for cold slaw, and stew in a covered saucepan till tender; drain it, return to saucepan, add a gill or more of rich cream, one ounce of butter, pepper and salt to taste; let simmer two or three minutes, then serve. Milk may be used by adding a little more butter; or have a deep spider hot, put in the sliced cabbage, pour quickly over it a pint of boiling water, cover close, and cook for ten minutes; then pour off water, and add half a pint of rich milk. When the milk boils stir in a teaspoonful of flour moistened with a little milk; season, cook a moment, and serve.

Cholera Medicine.—Over twenty years ago, several leading doctors of New York agreed on a recipe for the prevention of cholera, and published it in the Sun, from which it took the name of "Sun Cholera Medicine." It is this:

"Take equal parts of tincture of Cayenne pepper, tincture of opium, tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint, and spirits of camphor. Mix well. Dose, fifteen to thirty drops in a little cold water, according to age and violence of symptoms, repeated every fifteen minutes until relief is obtained."

An authority, after using it twenty years, says: "No one who has this by him, and takes it in time, will ever have the cholera. Even when no cholera is anticipated, it is an excellent remedy for ordinary summer-complaints, colic, diarrhœa, dysentary, &c."

Extra Fine Strawberry Plants.

Persons who desire to raise fine strawberries for home consumption or the market should provide good plants to set out. It is seldom difficult to procure strawberry plants, but those usually obtained are small and poorly supplied with roots. Most persons let the plants in old beds run to vines that completely cover the ground. As a consequence the individual plants are very small. If taken up out of hard ground many of the roots become injured or broken off. Unless great pains be taken with them they will not produce any fruit till the year after they are transplanted. By taking sufficient pains in procuring strong plants, they will produce a good crop of berries the same season they are set out. The best way to obtain good plants that will not be injured by removal or setting out, and which will produce fruit the same season, is to raise them in pots or little boxes. All have noticed that strawberry plants throw out runners after they have fruited. These runners terminate in a bud which throws out leaves and roots. The latter penetrate the soil and a new plant is formed. A new runner then forms and forms in turn another plant. If a three-inch pot, like those used by florists, is sunk into the soil beneath the place where the first bud is formed the roots of the new plant will extend into the soil that is in it and make a good growth. If any runner that appears from it is cut off the plant will become large and strong. After the plant becomes well established the runner that connects it with the parent plant may be cut off. Little boxes made of thin wood or pasteboard may be used instead of earthen pots. In the fall or following spring the plants can be placed where they are wanted.

Rain Idyls.

I.—IN THE COUNTRY.

The farmer stands at his honeysuckled portal, looking at the sky, while the expression floating across his features shows he is hungering for rain. His boy wants it to rain, also, but for a different reason. The farmer wants rain to develop his vegetables; the boy wants it to enable him to stay at home from school. But it won't rain; it will only threaten, and look just as though it is going to burst forth at any moment.—The clouds are purple; so is the farmer, and his face looks like an egg-plant frosted with fog. The clouds suddenly come up like a great army, and just as the agriculturist imagines they are going to burst, they retire, like a convention of delegates taking a recess previous to a fresh ballot, and the sun comes out, and makes everything bright, except the face of the farmer as he contemplates watering the farm with the pump, and the features of the small boy as he starts schoolward, his mind lined with unhappy thoughts and his trousers with shingles.

II.—IN THE CITY.

The bookkeeper swings nervously about on his stool. You can easily tell he is a bookkeeper, because he wears a long drab duster, has his hair faultlessly arranged, wipes his pen on his sleeve, and displays a poetic wanness that betrays an unrighteous affection for and relationship with ready-made apple-dumplings.

Is the young bookkeeper unhappy?

O, yes, the young bookkeeper is unhappy.

Why is the young bookkeeper unhappy?

Why, because it looks like rain.

That is the reason the young bookkeeper is unhappy. That is the reason he gets off his throne and looks out of the window, and stops adding in the middle of a column to ask some one if it is going to clear up, and borrows all the morning papers to consult, and puts his hand out of the door, and feels all over the atmosphere for drops, and watches to see if pedestrians have their umbrellas up, down, with them, or at home.

It is plain that he doesn't care any thing about the welfare of the crops.—He doesn't care if carrots are worth $20 a barrel next winter. He doesn't care if the country is prostrated by a paucity of parsnips in the autumn. He doesn't care if the sun burns the grass as yellow as a sunflower or the chaste envelope of a ham. What he wants is clear weather — at least for a few hours.

Why does he want clear weather for only a few hours?

Why, because his salary is 8 weeks overdrawn.

What has that to do with the weather?

A great deal; and his anxiety is as follows: he can't draw any more; he is down to his final dollar; he is engaged to take his lady to the theatre, and if it doesn't rain he sees just how he can manage the horse-car; but if it pours, he marvels much as to the manner in which he is to overcome a carriage, or rather a hackman.

And that is why the bookkeeper doesn't want rain much more keenly than the agriculturalist does.

Mormon Marriages.

The special correspondent of the New York World writes from Salt Lake, whence he was sent to picture the pleasures and conveniences of polygamy, that a Mormon friend enumerated at his request the following anomalies that he knew of in recent polygamous marriages:

"A young and very pretty girl in 'the upper ten' of Mormonism, married a young man of her own class, but stipulated before marriage that he should marry a second wife as soon as he could afford to do so. Against his will she has now kept him to his promise.

"A young couple were engaged, but quarreled, and the lover out of pique married another lady. Two years later his first love, having refused other offers in the meantime, married him as his second wife.

"A man having married a second wife to please himself, married a third to please his first.

"A couple about to be married made an agreement between themselves that the husband's second wife should be one of the relatives of the first wife. The lady who was selected refused, and the husband remained true to his promise for ten years. At the end of this time his first wife voluntarily chose another mate for him.

"The belle of the settlement, a gentile, refused monogamist offers of marriage, and married a Mormon who had two wives already.

"A girl, distracted between her love for her suitor and her love for her mother, compromised in her affections by stipulating that he should marry both her mother and herself, which he did.

"A girl, a gentile, bitterly opposed at first to polygamy, married a polygamist at the solicitation of his first wife, her great friend.

"Two girls were good friends, and one of them, getting engaged to a man by no means of prepossessing appearance, persuaded her friend to get engaged to him too, and he married them both on the same day."

The Dandelion.

Those who have been pestered to death by the irrepressible dandelion on their lawns may now take heart. The pest will pester them no more. Eastern markets have begun to utilize them for greens, so that gardeners cultivate them for sale. The plant having thus become useful, the bugs will eat it off above ground, the grub will saw its roots in two, the sun will parch it to death, the rains will drown it out, the rain will thrash it to strips, and the boys will dig it out and steal it. Thus the dandelion which has been among the first of the weeds to coax its way into favor in the spring by throwing out its golden blossom as a sort of flag of truce and peace offering combined, will retire from the field and the lawn to the seclusion of the guarded greenhouse.

"How to make babes grow: Soak them in boiling water, and dry them in the sun," said the type; and the editor had to explain that bulbs, not babes, were meant.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

He Overdid It.

So much can be heard every day about cranks and insanity in general, that a little incident that occurred in Franklin may prove interesting. A huge, brawny Irishman met another man on the street and by chance they jostled each other. The Irishman turned, and knocking the other man down, beat and kicked him until he was almost dead. He was arrested and thrown into the lock-up. The next morning he appeared before Alderman Bunce. He employed as his counsel one of the oldest attorneys at the bar, a Scotchman by birth. The attorney heard his account of the affray and saw there was no chance to save his client by the usual methods. He disliked to lose a case above all things. Leaning across the table, he whispered to the Irishman,—

"There is only one chance to clear you; play that you are insane."

The Irishman, glad to escape, no sooner heard it than he put it into practice. Up he jumped, and with the yell of a demon sprang into the centre of the room. With a kick he sent the stove flying into the corner of the room. Down came the pipe and soot on the usual court loafers; chairs flew, lamps were thrown from their brackets and pandemonium reigned supreme. Above all the din and uproar, however, could be heard the bewailing voice of the old lawyer, crying,—

"Ah, you have overdone it, my friend, you have overdone it."

And such proved to be the case. He was convicted and sentenced for a dual crime afterward.

The Alleged Dumb-for-Lying Youth.

Excitement exists among the congregation of the Rev. John Jasper's church, owing to the alleged mysterious affliction of a colored youth, who was a member. It is said that the youth ran away from home, was disobedient, and attempted to cover up his delinquencies by systematic lying to his mother. For this he was expelled from the church, and soon afterward the members were startled by the announcement that he had been struck dumb. This is regarded by the superstitious colored brothers and sisters as a visitation for telling lies, and the statements of several members confirm this aspect of the case. Some of the members of the church say when the boy returned from Charlottesville his mother rebuked him for running away, and ordered him to stay in Richmond and assist her. The boy made a promise to his mother, but never fulfilled it. He told a lie about it, and said he "hoped God would paralyze his tongue if what he stated was not true." That occurred two or three days ago. Soon after the boy had made this declaration his tongue seemed to grow thick, and he could not articulate well. He continued in this condition till the night of the church meeting, when in as loud a voice as he was able he made the same declaration, calling upon God to paralyze his tongue. Immediately afterward he was unable to speak and there was great consternation. Other members of the church insist that the boy is shamming, which is most probably the case.—Richmond Va. State.

An Appalling Thought.

During the second year of the war a grocer in an Ohio town scaled his prices by reports from the front. One day a defeat would cut the price of butter four cents; the next day a victory would raise the price of eggs a penny a dozen, and the victory or defeat was certain to hit even the jar of nutmegs on the top shelf. One day a farmer who had some butter to sell entered the store, and asked the going price.

"I am paying sixteen to-day," was the answer.

"But only two days ago you paid twenty."

"Yes; but you see Pope has been defeated since that, and there is a back action." The farmer sold out, and wanted the most of it in sugar, and the grocer remarked, as he made ready to weigh it, "Sugar has advanced a cent a pound since Monday."

"Mercy on me! How is that?"

"Because the rebels got licked in Tennessee."

The old man sat down on a nail keg and thought it all over, and presently looked up and said, "My friend, if a Federal defeat cheapens what you buy, and a rebel victory enhances the value of what you sell, what a fix you'd be in if there should happen to be a drawn battle."

He "Jest Yanked It Out of His Year."

While talking with James Milton Sherrod the other day, the latter carelessly pulled out of his pocket a very handsome agate, round and worn smooth by constant use as an ear ornament. It had a hole drilled through the top, and by a deer's sinew this trinket had formerly been suspended from the ear of some Sioux braye. The work on the stone showed the crude and patient efforts of the untutored red man. On being asked how he secured the agate, Mr. Sherrod, after whittling off some black tobacco with a butcher knife, rubbed it in the palm of his hand awhile, and then, after putting it in his pipe and trying ineffectually for a long time to light it, said:

"I got it up in the Black Hills in '76. A lot of Sioux Indians ambuscaded me one evening in the form of a horseshoe, and I had to cut my way through. I killed several of them, and the rest lit out. When I come to assess the dead, I found a big fellow wearing this here agate tied on with a deer's sinner, and I jest yanked it out of his year. There was another one in his other year that I got, but I lost it. It was the exact fact similar to this here one."—Laramie Boomerang.

Of Webster, the English actor who died recently, it is related that one day, when at the point of death, two of his old friends had called to see him.—The end, they thought, had come, so they reverently covered his face with a sheet and went down stairs to console themselves. They found out his whisky and cigars and sat down to make a night of it under the dead man's roof, when suddenly the door opened. There stood Ben. Webster in his winding sheet. "I am not dead yet," chuckled the inevitable old man, "but I see you know how to enjoy yourselves."

A Tough Sea Yarn.

The crew of a Shetland fishing-boat unite in declaring that they were attacked a fortnight ago by a monster, in comparison with which the terror of American waters is as insignificant as a shrimp. They declar that they hauling heir lines twenty-eight miles east-southeast of Fetlar when they saw at a short distance from them something that had the appearance of three small hillocks, each about the size of a six-oared boat upset, which blew when coming to the surface. It disappeared in the direction of the boat, and shortly after they saw the monster pass underneath the boat. When it came up again it started right in their direction with its mouth wide open—a mouth, they say, that to all appearance could have taken in their boat. There seemed to be whiskers of a green color, and about seven or eight feet long, hanging from its mouth; very large green eyes, and on its head were great lumps about the size of a herring barrel. They threw stones at it, but it still came on toward them, and only again disappeared below water when a few yards from the boat, on a charge of swan-shot being discharged out of a fowling piece into its mouth. The lines were then cut and all sail was made for home, when the monster again appeared in the wake. This time they observed that it had two large fins, almost the size of the boat,s mainsail, which were stretched up from its back, and its length they computed to be no less than 150 feet. It followed them up for a distance of nine miles and then disappeared.

Why He Was Agin the Railroad.

A rauchman dropped in this morning to say that he didn't want a railroad nor a paper that favored a railroad, and he wasn't going to encourage the one by remaining near it nor the other by subscribing for it, and he was going to move off and away where railroads couldn't come and where newspapers that talked railroad couldn't reach.

"Them is my ultimatum," he exclaimed with warmth. "I'm dead agin railroads, railroad organs and all that, you bet. Sixteen year ago this month the keers kiled the likeliest heifer in Clay County. She cost me thirteen dollars, and the company wouldn't pay more'n nine, and I just dusted out uv thar and kivered a space of kintry I thot the blasted keers would never reach; but here they come agin, starting their plows and scrapers right through the south eend of my pasture and I'm durned if I stand it. I've sold out to a fellow from Illanoy, and I've got my eye sot on a patch of medder and mountin that no railroad kin climb to, and thar I'm bound as quick as mules and waggin will take me. Railroads! Ter h—l with railroads and all which are friends of railroads."

The rancher, at a white heat, withdrew, leaving us utterly crushed under the weight of his vigorous and relentless anathemas.—Helena (Montana) Herald.

Gathering Pineapples.

The average life of the "scarlet" pine is three years; that of the sugar-loaf is about five. The average weight of the fruit in the Bahamas is from three to three and-a-half pounds. A field is generally gone over three times during the season, affording three grades of fruit, called first, second and third cuttings. The scarlet variety ripens a month or two earlier than the sugar-loaf. Owing to the sharp serrated leaves of the plant the gathering of the fruit is a tedious and difficult matter, the men, women and children engaged in the work being obliged to wear heavy canvas leggings and gloves with gauntlets to protect themselves against the sharp spines of the plant.

The pine-apple plants furnish but one regular crop during the year, although the local markets are seldom without a few pineapples on sale. About the middle of April the first cuttings are made of the scarlet pines, and the last is made about the 1st of July. The sugar-loaf pine is at maturity during July and August. The shipping season is one of signal activity in the colony, for when the fruit is ready for the knife it must be cut and hurried with all speed to market or it will be lost.

No Time to Tell a Lie.

Jesse C. had the reputation of being the "biggest liar" in Georgia, and was never known to come out behind. One hot day Bill H. sat on the shady side of his barn. After dinner he saw Jess riding in great haste toward town. Bill hailed him and went to the gate. Jess asked what he wanted. "Stop and tell us a big lie," said Bill. "No time for lying now," said Jess. "Your Uncle Sol died suddenly an hour ago, and I am going for the coroner and a coffin." And on he went. Bill ran to the house and told his wife. She gathered up the children. He hitched the horse to the wagon, loaded in his family, and posted off four miles through the heat and dust to Uncle Sol's. On arriving he found the family and the neighbors in the large kitchen, Uncle Sol buried—to the eyes in half a big water-melon. The surprise was mutual and explanations followed. "Well," said Bill, "I asked Jess for a big lie, and not only got it but was fool enough to believe it. I wouldn't believe him again if I knew he was dying."—Marietta Journal.

The Engineer Was Warned.

An engineer while riding on his engine in front of a train down the mountain steeps of the Clearfield Branch, Pennsylvania, recently, after testing the quantity of water in his boiler by using the two upper gauges, which indicated that all was right, heard a voice. "Try the lower gauge." The voice was loud and distinct, and he says was the voice of his father, who has been dead for some year. After looking around to see him he opened the lower gauge, and found no water. The boiler was foaming, and the engineer says but for his timely warning all would have been blown up in ten minutes.—Williamsport Sun.

It is calculated that every railway traveler in the United States, in every dollar paid for fare, contributes, on an average, fifteen cents to stockholders, twenty cents to bondholders, and sixty-five cents towards working expenses.

TECUMSEH, MICH., AUG. 24, 1882.

The Ypsilanti Commercial has come out red-hot for Willitts. It believes that every ward and town should select its own delegates independent of "Boss" dictation. And furthermore it believes in encouraging and rewarding Congressmen, like Willitts, who stand unflinchingly for the people's rights and pockets.

There is said to be a quiet but earnest canvass going on in the first representative district of this county. Dr. Howell, of Macon, James Cook, of Raisin, and Wm. B. Hill, of Palmyra, are all in the field, and each can control a fair showing of delegates. These aspirants are all Republicans. Candidates on the Democratic side have not yet shown up.

The death of Senator Hill, of Georgia, deprives the Senate of one of its ablest members. He was a typical Southerner, impetuous in action, vehement in debate, and red-hot in defending his section. But he was a man of pure character, of great natural ability, and of incorruptible honesty. He was an honor to the Senate and a credit to his State. It will be no easy matter to fill his place.

It looks now as though the Republicans of this district would have the opportunity of voting for Mr. Willitts for re-election to Congress, and they could go farther and fare much worse. He has made a good record during his six years' service in Congress, is a man of ability, and is in sympathy with the management of the Republican party. No man who honestly believes that the Republican party as now controlled, should be kept in power, can have any objection to Mr. Willitts on personal grounds. He has made a faithful, honest representative, and is certainly better fitted for the position than any of his competitors.

The preliminary contest for Congress in the second district will be decided at Adrian to-morrow. The present indication points to a sharp struggle and the final nomination of Mr. Willitts. The first ballot will undoubtedly stand as follows:

Sawyer, of Washtenaw	20
Boies, of Lenawee	24
Dickerman, of Hillsdale	16
Willitts, of Monroe	14

Thirty-eight votes are necessary to a choice.

Neither Sawyer, Boies nor Dickerman can draw any personal strength outside of their own county, and will get none, except by a trade. When it comes to trading Mr. Willitts has decidedly the advantage. As soon as the break-up arrives, Mr. Willits will have his county solid, and he will be reinforced by six or eight delegates from each of the three other counties who will vote for him as their second choice. The result will be that Willitts will walk off with the nomination.

Hon. T. F. Moore, of this county, made a speech at the State Grange picnic last week in which he used these sensible words:

Farmers are not dealt with fairly in regard to taxation. The reason for this is because the tax law is faulty.—This theory he illustrated by saying that he owned a tract of land in a certain district. His next door neighbor was by profession a lawyer. In six months this lawyer could earn more from his profession than he could off his land in two years. Hence he believed that all professions and trades should be considered as property and taxed accordingly. He also stated the railroads of this state were paying a tax of only $500,000 on an estimated capital of $200,000,000. That there were millions of dollars worth of property in Detroit not one dollar of which is accounted for on the assessment rolls. The farmers of this state do not wish to oppose the railroads. We gave them land and every encouragement and these roads are bound, in return, by the Supreme Court of the United States to deel with us justly. Are they doing it? I wish to bring up one more evil, and that is the present loose way of assessment. All assessments should be given under oath, but by an act of the last Legislature this is left optional with the Supervisor.—What is the result? I am satisfied that more than nine-tenths of the money in bonds in this way escapes taxation. To illustrate: E. L. Clark, of Lenawee county, was put down for whatever he was pleased to name, and was assessed $50,000. He died soon after. His estate turned out in probate $800,000. Had the Supervisor placed Mr. Clark on oath the State would have received what honestly belonged to it; but then the official would not be Supervisor next year.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

SEVENTEENTH WEEK.

We are two travelers, Roger and I; Roger's my dog. —J. T. TROWBRIDGE.

How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
When fond recollection presents them to view.
The orchard, the meadow, the deep tangled wildwood,
And every loved spot which my infancy knew.
The wide spreading pond and the mill that stood by it;
The bridge and the rock where the cataract fell;
The cot of my father, the dairy-house nigh it,
And e'en the wide bucket that hung in the well;
The old oaken bucket, the iron-bound bucket,
The moss-covered bucket which hung in the well.
SAMUEL WOODWORTH.

Monday, July 25th.—Columbus and Ellic hoed beans in the forenoon. In the afternoon the sheep broke through the fence of the pasture lot and got into the road. Why they should have been uneasy is a mystery, as the thistle crop in the pasture is an extra good one. The men hunted sheep all the afternoon and finally found them four miles South in the town of Raisin. Two of them had been disabled by dogs and one was missing.

Tuesday, July 26th.—Columbus and Ellic hoed beans. I am bound to have a good crop of beans if hoeing amounts to anything. The patch has been hoed with six different kinds of hoes, and the boys will go through it to-morrow with the new patent double-reel traveling hoe. Ichabod has got his rudder attachment completed, which he feels confident will work like a charm. Sold another calf for five dollars. I have concluded, in case I should lease the farm another season, to raise fifty calves next year.

Wednesday, July 27th.—Columbus and Ellic hoed beans all day with the new patent hoe. Ichabod managed the business end of the hoe, while Ellic guided the steering apparatus. One man could run the hoe, but it would dig up half the beans. In order to save the bean crop, it became necessary to run the hoe with two hands. It has no respect for age or condition. Everything that crosses its path is ruthlessly rooted out. It is as good as a two-shovel cultivator drawn by a mule. A stout boy can take the place of a mule when using this hoe, which will make a great saving in the expense account. I shall start a factory to manufacture these hoes another season.

Thursday, July 21st.—Columbus and Ellic both cultivated corn all day. Ellic used the two-shovel and Ichabod the long-legged five-tooth animal. This morning I promised the man, who would cultivate the most corn today and do it in the best shape, a new hat and a plug of tobacco, and the way the dirt flew in that cornfield was a caution. Upon looking over the field at night I found that Ellic had cultivated two rows more than Ichabod, and had torn up twenty-six more hills of corn, but Columbus had knocked four legs out of his cultivator. I compromised the matter by giving each a new five-cent hat and charging them $5 each for the corn dug up.

Friday, July 29d.—The men both cultivated corn to-day and finished the field. I withdrew the prizes for this day's work, as I wished to save a part of the crop till it came to maturity.

Saturday, July 30th.—I had company come from Adrian last evening and they stopped over night. To insure an extra good breakfast the landlady let the butter down in the well so it would keep hard, and stirred up the griddle-cake batter the night before with baker's yeast. When she took the butter out this morning she inadvertently left the cover off the hole in the well platform. Columbus had just finished a blessing of unusual length and eloquence and had the carving fork in a big potato, when a cry came apparently from the cellar, Ki-yi-yi. "Good heavens," said Columbus, "that dog Tiger has tumbled in the well." Tiger had dropped down the same hole through which the butter came up. The table was deserted instanter. Ellic ran for the thirty-foot ladder, George went for the horse hay fork rope, Mrs. Columbus went for the clothes line, and the hired girl ran up-stairs and took the bed cord out of the spare bed. Columbus made a noose in the end of the clothes line and let it down to the water but it was useless. The dog would catch the noose in his teeth and when the rope was pulled up he would let go. The bed cord was tried and it served no better pourpose. Meanwhile Tiger kept up an unearthly yell and was swimming for dear life thirty feet below. The ladder was lowered in the well, and when the lower end struck bottom the top was five feet below the platform. Columbus tied the horse-fork rope around his waist, and he was lowered down till he touched the ladder, and then descended on that to the water. Tiger embraced his rescuer thankfully and Ichabod started upward with the dog in his arms. When about fifteen feet up he lost his foothold, and they both rolled to the bottom together. But George and Ellic had hold of the "guy rope" above, and with their aid Ichabod soon reached the ladder again. After three ineffectual attempts he finally reached the top of the ladder, and he and the dog were jerked upon dry land. It only took forty-five minutes to get Tiger back on the stone platform where he started from. The men spent the rest of the day cleaning out the well.

How dear to my heart is my amateur farming,
When memory's call brings it up for review,
The pigs in the garden, the bumble bees swarming,
And the rows in the cornfield, so grandly askew,
The hedge in the door yard and strawberries nigh it,
The big water tank in which Ichabod fell,
The peas in the orchard, the onion patch by it,
And even old Tiger, who dropped in the well.
Our shaggy-haired Tiger, our fleet-footed Tiger,
Our peaked-nosed Tiger, who dropped in the well.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

The county convention to select delegates to the State and Congressional Conventions was held at Adrian last Monday. As there was a warm struggle over congressional delegates it called out a full convention, every township and ward being represented. The state delegates were chosen without any trouble. In the second district there was a hot fight over congressional delegates, as Mr. Willitts had a strong following in that district but the Willitts men were outvoted in making up the list, and the list was ratified by the convention. Below are the delegates chosen:

BEES AT THE STATE FAIR.

The Michigan State Agricultural Society are fitting up on the fair grounds at Jackson, Mich., a fine building for the exhibition of bees, honey and bee-keepers' supplies with a wire room in one part for the exhibition of Bees. The society offer premiums amounting to one hundred and fifteen dollars, the largest ever offered by any Agricultural Society in this country. It is open to the world and it is hoped and expected that each and every bee-keeper will avail himself of this opportunity and make one grand exhibition of bees, honey and supplies.

The last day of the fair will be a grand sales day, when each exhibitor can sell anything on exhibition and not wait until after the fair is over as heretofore. This will bring a great many bee-keepers on the last day; for they can buy and take off the grounds anything on exhibition. A large number of the leading bee-keepers have promised to be there and exhibit, and the display of bees, honey and supplies will be very large.

A special premium will be given to any lady making the largest and best display of bees and their products.—The fair commences on the eighteenth of September and will close the twenty-second. Any bee-keeper unable to attend the fair in person and having anything he wishes exhibited or sold, will send it by freight or express, charges paid, to H. D. Cutting, Jackson, Mich., when it will be taken care of according to instructions. For any information write to H. D. Cutting, Clinton, Mich., chairman of committee for State Fair exhibition.

The North American Review for September has for its leading article a very forcible presentment, by Dorman B. Eaton, of the evils produced by the practice of levying "Political Assessments." The paper is note-worthy for its striking array of facts, but more so because it will be universally regarded as the ultimatum of a large and influential section of the Republican party, addressed to the party leaders. "Oaths in Legal Proceedings," by Judge Edward A. Thomas, is a discussion of the question whether the interests of morality and of public justice alike, would not be promoted by the abrogation of all laws requiring testimony to be given under the sanction of an oath. Thompson B. Maury, late of the Signal Office contributes an article on "Tornadoes and their Causes." The Review is sold by booksellers and newsdealers generally.

"Wait a Little Longer."

So we are told sometimes. Things will come out all right, people say, if you will wait awhile. That don't do with disease. The longer you wait the worse it is. It's no use to plant corn in November. Do you "feel a little bad?" Strike the trouble right away. Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is what you want. It will at once relieve the Bowels, stimulate the Liver and regulate the Skin. Take One Dollar in your hand and stop at your Druggists, or write to the Doctor at Rondout, N. Y.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. The doctors said she could not escape an early grave, but fortunately she began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and in a short time was completely cured. Doubting ones, please write Mrs. Clarke, and be convinced. Sold by all druggists.

SUCCESS IN BUSINESS.

The Career of a New Jersey Organ-Builder, Daniel F. Beatty.

Success in business is undoubtedly the result of intelligence, pluck, and enterprise. It is said that the Hon. Daniel F. Beatty, of Washington, N. J., began business in 1870 without one dollar. Since that time he has built up an enormous Piano and Organ trade all over the civilized world by his remarkable pluck and enterprise. His attention was early turned to music, and in this way he became interested in the sale, and finally in the manufacture of musical instruments at Washington, New Jersey, which bear his name. His first operations were on a small scale, but his active and progressive mind saw wide fields open to energy and enterprise. He never wavered or faltered in his project. By his shrewd, skillful and persistent newspaper advertising he has attracted wide attention everywhere, so that at the present his instruments are in use in all parts of the civilized world. He believes in the free use of printer's ink, and it has paid him a thousand-fold.

Mr. Beatty was the man who first conceived the idea of reducing the prices of Pianos and Organs. He knew the agents were making entirely too much profit on them. He at once began to expose the deception practiced by leading manufacturers, who asked $450 for an Organ that could be sold for $90, and still leave a fair profit, or $1,000 for a Piano that $297 is sufficient for. Then the war began. He was ridiculed and misrepresented in a shameful manner by the monopolists, whose large profits were in danger. No stone was left unturned to defeat and ruin him. Circulars were printed and sent out, and circulated by their agents, articles were published in music trade journals, and many other dirty tricks were resorted to. But, by the course of right and justice, Mayor Beatty has succeeded in reducing the prices of Pianos and Organs, so that he is said to be by far the most successful man that has ever engaged in the music business.

On the 18th of Sept., 1881, a fire destroyed his immense factory, employing at that time about 400 hands. The indomitable will of the man immediately asserted itself, and a new factory, covering 4 acres, combining all the improvements in manufacturing, which had suggested themselves, was erected, and in 120 days was in running order, and turning out 50 completed organs daily. The new factory was one-third larger in size, with facilities for manufacturing that are not equalled in any other Reed Organ works on the globe. It is equipped for running all night, having a complete Edison Electric Lighting system, with 300 lights. A special railroad has been built to the factory door for saving all the expense of cartage on lumber, coal and organs, thus saving a large per cent. in cost of manufacture. He offers as an inducement to come and visit his works and select an organ, a reduction of from $5 to $15, according to distance traveled. This includes a free ride upon Beatty's Switch-back R. R., connecting his establishment with the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad.

GEMS FOR THE FIRESIDE.

A Bountiful Storehouse of Literary Riches.

In these days of mental and physical hurry, humanity insists that its food, both for the mind and for the stomach, shall be condensed into the smallest possible limit consistent with healthy nutrition. People want the material they read and the material they eat concentrated. The life of the average American is so busy that he has no time to waste in the tedious processes of digestion; he demands his nourishment in such forms that it will be absorbed immediately and enter directly into his physical and intellectual development. He cannot pause to test each preparation that falls beneath his notice, and is determined to use only those whose nutritive qualities appear at a glance, and which he knows by experience are nutritious and healthful.

It was apparently with a lively appreciation of those truths and a sincere desire to accommodate the expansive tendencies of our literature to the necessities of American civilization, that Rev. Dr. Tiffany prepared the magnificent work entitled "Gems for the Fireside," lately issued by the well known publisher, A. W. Mills, of Tecumseh, Mich. It is by all odds the most ambitious and most skillfully executed work of its class ever undertaken in this country, presenting in a single volume a complete reflex of the classic literature of five centuries. The selections embodied in its pages represent the best work of every prominent author the world has known since the days of Shakespeare and Milton. There are gems of prose and poetry, wit and wisdom, philosophy and religion, from nearly every leading thinker and writer of both hemispheres. Shakespeare, Milton, Burns, Byron, Moore, Shelley, Scott, Goethe, Tennyson, Campbell, Dickens, Macaulay and scores of other less notable European authors are represented in its pages, while the Americans quoted from begin with Byrant, Whittier, Longfellow, Holmes, Saxe, Everett, Franklin and Reid, and verge outward to those of lesser fame.

The work is illustrated in a manner that comports well with its exalted literary excellence. The engravings are from such artists as Moran, Russell, Darley, Gray, Hill, Hennessey, Parsons, and others of equal note. It contains upward of 700 pages, and the mechanical execution is in keeping with the characters of the work in other particulars, showing in its best American progress in the book making art. The paper, the presswork, the binding—all are perfect.

The work is altogether one of the most beautiful ever published in this country, and is having a sale, as it deserves, almost unexampled in the history of the subscription book trade.—Petroleum World.

THE power which a good country newspaper wields has never been estimated. It is a recognized educator of the country masses, and in times of civil commotion its utterances are carefully weighed. GEO. FREEZE, of Clinton, has invented a new bracket for sustaining shelves in stores and other places. It is so arranged that it can be placed at any point under the shelf and used without screws or nails. The device is certainly one of the neatest ever gotten up. Freeze & Silvers have a patent on it and will soon put it on the market.

Saline Observer: The loss by last week's freshet was even greater than was at first reported, especially the loss of stock. John Burg and Edward DePuy each had about fifty sheep drowned. They were grazing on the flats near the river, and the rise of water surrounded them before they could reach high ground. Several other smaller losses of stock are also reported.

The sheriffs of the several counties of Michigan meet in convention at Grand Rapids, on August 25. The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad have very generously placed at the disposal of the officers a palace car, which the road will run to Petoskey on Saturday and return to Grand Rapids on the following Monday. This is an act on the part of the railroad company that will be highly appreciated by the state sheriffality.

SINK'S HOTEL.

Since W. H. Sink took possession of the old Merchant's Hotel, he has made it one of the best public houses in Michigan. Extensive repairs and improvements have been going on there for the past two months, which render the house still more commodious and deserving of patronage. The two parlors on the second floor have received new carpets and elegant furniture, and the walls have been ornamented with the latest and most elaborate designs of ceiling decorations. The parlor and chamber sets for the North parlor exceed in elegance and costliness anything ever before placed in a hotel in Tecumseh, and we doubt whether their superiors can be found in any private residence of our village. New carpets are also placed in all the hallways. The new suits of rooms in the third story are furnished and ready for occupancy. There are fourteen rooms on this floor, or seven complete suits, each suit comprising a sitting-room and bed-room adjoining. They are twelve feet in the clear and all provided with windows opening upon the street which have inside blinds. Each bed-room has an independent door into the hall, and every door has a movable transom window over it. As regards light and ventilation these rooms are perfect. And Mr. Sink is furnishing them so as to compare with the rooms themselves. Each bed is provided with steel springs and a hair mattress, and each room is furnished with a sofa, commode, washing bureau, center table, and several chairs of various patterns. The entire floor, halls and all, is covered with elegant carpeting. Egress can be had from these rooms down three flights of stairs, which render them absolutely safe in case of fire. The Hotel now contains fifty-four rooms for the sole use of guests, and they are all ready for occupancy.

Thus much for the material accommodations of this Hotel. When it comes to the business management of the establishment, words of praise are superfluous. Mr. Sink has been there before and knows how to keep a hotel. His table is always provided with a good supply. Gentlemanly clerks and employes make the guests feel at home, and the general cleanliness and homelikeness of the house attracts good custom. When a man puts up at Sink's once he always calls again when he comes this way.

OUR NEW RAILROAD.

THE TOLEDO & MILWAUKEE ENTERPRISE NOT YET DEAD.

A Railroad from Toledo to Allegan Will Surely be Built—And Tecumseh Can Secure It on Certain Conditions.

The Toledo & Milwaukee railroad is booming again. The items which have lately appeared in print in regard to the formation of a syndicate to construct this road are founded on fact, although somewhat incorrect in detail. We can now give our readers the exact situation of affairs. Mr. J. A. Latcha, the President of the T. & M. road called a meeting of interested parties on the line of the proposed road to be held in Toledo on Tuesday evening last. This conference was held at the Boody House at the time appointed, and the following towns were represented. Marshall by Judge Ingersoll, Chas. T. Gorham, C. P. Dibble, M. J. Alexander and C. H. Porter; Homer by Thos. Lyon and Geo. H. French; Addison by O. B. Bowen, I. N. Hathaway and Fred. Curtis; Tecumseh by Wm. Hayden, N. M. Sutton, Jno. Heck, M. Davidson and S. C. Stacy; Jerome by W. H. Walsworth; Moscow by J. N. Murry and Daniel Arnold.

The delegation was met by Mr. Latcha himself and by Col. Jas. E. Neal, attorney for the syndicate which is to build the road. An interview was held lasting until late in the evening, and the situation was fully disclosed. The Ohio and Michigan syndicate have decided to construct a line of road into Michigan as a feeder for the N. Y., Chicago & St. Louis line.—This much is a fixed fact. The contracts, however, have not yet been let, nor has the exact route been determined upon. Two lines are in contemplation: one from Toledo to Tecumseh, Addison, Homer and Marshall, in other words the T. & M. line, and the other directly west from Toledo to the south-east corner of Branch county, thence to Coldwater and Marshall. The latter line would run midway between the Air Line and old Michigan line of the Lake Shore road, and in easy grades and directness forms a very feasible route.—The friends of the T. & M. claim that this line, although more indirect and over a rougher country, would pass through much better towns for business. Mr. Latcha has secured a pledge from the syndicate to build on the T. & M. route upon these conditions, that the bonus notes already given shall be extended one year, and the right of way put in satisfactory shape where not already perfected. And this work must be done within two weeks after the present week. The delegates present from the different towns seemed to think there would be no trouble whatever in meeting the required conditions within that time.

For the purpose of getting the work started at the earliest possible moment meetings will be held as follows: At Tecumseh, in the Council Building, on this, Thursday evening; at the cheese factory, in Cambridge, Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock; at Tuttle's hall in Franklin on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock; in Ridgeway village next Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.—Meetings will also be held at Addison, Homer, Marshall and other towns at the west end of the line at once, and a grand forward move will be made along the entire line immediately.—In case our line shall be built, the eastern end of the route will be settled upon hereafter. It will run from Dundee on the T. & A. A. parallel with the turnpike to Ridgeway and Tecumseh, or from Toledo direct to Ridgeway, or from Toledo direct to Tecumseh on an independent line.—Should the bonus notes be extended and this line fixed upon, the eastern terminus will then be definitely decided.

We believe our citizens will come up to the work cheerfully, and promptly extend their notes upon presentation. It is needless to argue the necessity of securing this new railroad.—People have seen for themselves what a competing line of railway can do for a town in the business boom which the Wabash line has given Adrian.—It is superfluous therefore to waste any ink in discussing this question. That this railroad would be a great business advantage to Tecumseh is a self-evident fact. The road is certainly within our reach. A few days' active work and friendly co-operation on the part of every one will secure it. Then let the campaign be short, sharp, and decisive. The necessary work can be done in two weeks as easily as in two months. Let every man place his shoulder to the wheel and give us a lift.

Morenci Observer: The County Mutual Insurance Co., seems to be enjoying special immunity from fires this season, as the losses for the last nine months only amount to 3½ cents on a thousand dollars of the amount insured. The number of policies in force aggregate about 4,600, covering nearly seven and one-half millions of property. The company is fortunate in securing so square and capable an official as Mr. Allis, the secretary.

A DAY'S recreation cannot be obtained more cheaply than by taking a trip to Put-in-Bay on Tuesday next.

The Soldiers' Reunion.

Ample preparations have been made to entertain the Soldiers and Sailors at Adrian Aug. 30, at the annual reunion. The committees have arranged a program of exercises consisting of an address of welcome, response, five minute speeches by comrades, music, &c., to be followed by a banquet. A general invitation is extended to all Soldiers of the county. Let all come.

OF INTEREST TO TEACHERS.

Upon the opening of the Tecumseh Public Schools, Sept. 4th, 1882, there will be organized a Normal or Teachers' Class, open to all who may desire to attend, for the purpose of review or advance work. This class will be under the direction of the Superintendent, assisted by other competent instructors. It will continue eight weeks, and will finish its work in time for the regular public examination of teachers, Oct. 27th. Particular attention will be given to organization and management of schools, theory and practice of teaching, and to a thorough review of all branches upon which teachers will be required to pass examination beford the Board of Examiners. In this work, it will be the aim of the instructors to present the latest and best methods of teaching. There will also be given a few special lessons in School Law, in order that teachers may understand how to act intelligently in all cases of difficulty that may arise. It has been the aim of the Board of Education to select a corps of teachers with special reference to experience and qualifications in their respective departments; and an opportunity will be given to members of the Teachers' Class to visit the different departments, for the purpose of observing the methods of instruction there pursued.

No pains will be spared to make the work of this class profitable and practical. We would also say, to those who contemplate attending school where greater advantages can be had than in ordinary district schools, and who may not desire to join the Teachers' Class, that it has been and still is our aim to make the schools of Tecumseh equal to any and second to none for non-resident pupils. Any further information may be had by calling upon any member of the Board or the Superintendent, Prof. D. A. Hammond.

TELEPHONE TALK.

Now let's have the city telephonically connected with Hudson, Blissfield and Morenci.—Times.

We would be pleased to help start the thing, and have no doubt but what it could be accomplished. The benefit and convenience of such an arrangement is very obvious. Let's have the telephone.—Blissfield Advance.

The Manchester Enterprise says: Our neighboring town, Clinton, is to be connected with the telephone exchange by running a line to Tecumseh. This shows that there is a true spirit of enterprise among the business men of that town, and that they wish to avail themselves of the advantages of modern improvements. Why cannot we, situated as we are in the midst of a thriving community, do as well as Clinton and Saline? We could enjoy the valuable advantages of the telephone at a small cost. Shall we not make the attempt?

Hudson is getting waked up on securing a telephone connection with Adrian. The Gazette says: While in Adrian the other day a Gazette representative was introduced to Mr. J. W. Mason, the courteous and efficient manager of the Bell Telephone office in that city, whose kind invitation to "phone" a few words to Detroit, Ann Arbor, Port Huron, Saline or Ypsilanti friends, was graciously accepted, a journalistic friend immediately summoned, and his auricular tortured for a full half hour. It was Geo. Stacy, of the Tecumseh HERALD, and he should have recognized the voice had he "phoned" us from the far-off land of China, and we were not even apprised of his whereabouts in this country, or presence, so natural-like was the voice transmitted over the fine wires and into our ear. He told us of Tecumseh's prosperity, the convenience experienced by its people in being connected with the State telephone exchange, and the flourishing condition of its local exchange, which now has 31 members with prospects good for adding five new ones before long. He closed by saying "our people are delighted with the benefits derived from the State and local exchanges, and would not be severed from either for five times the amount it cost to secure both." A short chat with other parties along the line further convinced us of the perfection of the company's State exchange and more favorably impressed us with the idea of the utilization of the wonderful invention and the State exchange, by Hudson people, which can be done at a small cost (as compared to what other places have paid) by extending the line from Adrian to Hudson.

If American ladies really want to make the proprietors of the big dry goods stores provide seats for the saleswomen—or, saleladies, if that is the proper term—they can probably do so by following the example of the London ladies. In that city ladies sign and transmit to the managers of shops where they deal a petition asking that seats be provided for the tired saleswomen and gently hinting that their patronage depends upon the store-keepers acquiescence. The plan is working admirably.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is adored by the babies. I once saw him, says a correspondent, get in a pretty basket phaeton for a drive with a five-year-old admirer, and before they had gone a block he had filled the phaeton with half a dozen dirty little street youngsters, from 2 to 5 years, and, to crown all, had a round-eyed German baby on his lap, sitting in passive enjoyment, and unconscious of the undignified picture. "Well," he said afterward, "the poor little toddlers looked so wishful at the phaeton, and my little girl guest said let's take 'em along."

Plain Sewing.

I called the other day upon a bride who was actually "doing" plain sewing. I could hardly believe the evidence of my senses at first; but is was true—she held in her hand a piece of fine unbleached muslin which she was making into a pillow case, sewing the seam over and over in the old fashioned way our grandmothers did in the long ago. Soon the broad hem was turned down by a thread and sewed. The stitches were so small and true that one almost needed a microscope to discover them. How beautiful the work looked! "But why do you all this by hand when you could do it so much more quickly on your mother's machine?" inquired a friend who was present; "and why do you use the unbleached muslin?" "Oh it looks so much better when it begins to be slightly worn; there are never any frayed corners torn out by the wind when the washing is out, nor dark lines along the hems when hanging on the line, and I really like to sew as my mother taught me before machines were so common. If I had a great deal of sewing and little time to do all I require. Of course, I might have had all this work done before I was married if I had so desired. But then I should have been so hurried that instead of helping mother, she no doubt would have worked herself sick in the endeavor to assist me. We did at our leisure what we thought necessary before the wedding, and then enjoyed each other's society in every possible way by laying plans for my future improvement, visiting pleasant, intelligent people and sometimes taking long rambles together in the grand old wood. Now I have trunks full of cloth to be made into household accessories, and I shall find the task a pleasant one. The unbleached sheeting wears longer than the bleached, and washes easier; that is why I use it."

A Remarkable Moss.

The material so closely resembling horse-hair, which is extensively used for stuffing carriage-cushions, etc., is not horse-hair at all, but a curious kind of moss which grows in Alabama and Louisiana. An article in an agricultural exchange gives this description of the moss "harvesting" and preparation. The moss is gathered mostly by negroes, and after a tree is stripped it is allowed to rest for seven years, during which time the moss renews itself.

Cypress most is preferred, as it is the longest and most tenacious of all the varieties. After the moss is gathered, it is placed in a sunny spot and left to the action of the wind and weather for a month.

At the end of that time the grayish bark peels off, leaving the hair almost clean. It is then sold to the plantation store-keeper or country grocery-man, who pays from one to two cents a pound for it, according to quality.

The next move is to send the material to New Orleans to manufacture. After the moss reaches the factory, it is subjected to the action of the washer, which is a large cylindrical arrangement, with a wheel inside, which pulls the moss hither and thither, and lashes it through a vat of boiling water and soap, until the stuff is cleaned.

Then it is hung out upon rocks to dry. This done, it is put into the duster—a fan-mill which entirely removes all the dust that may have survived the washing process. As a result, the moss comes into the factory yellow in color, and goes out inky black. The article is then made up into bales, and marked according to quality. The highest grade can hardly be distinguished from the finest horse-hair.

Shooting a Diamond Through a Man's Heart.

"When I was down in Texas, I always carried a big roll of money around with me. But so I would not be apt to lay myself liable to foul play, I generally carried some loose change in my pockets to settle all bills. Once, however, I was in a saloon and having run out of change was compelled to pull out my roll. As I did so I noticed a big, rough-looking Texan with a bad eye, and a broad, outlawish-looking sombrero, with his gaze riveted upon me.—What I noticed more particularly was a large and brilliant diamond he wore in his shirt front. I felt a little uneasy about my money, and when I went to bed that night saw that my navy revolver was in good condition. I placed the money and revolver under my pillow. In the night I was awakened by hearing some strange noise in the room, and looking up I saw in a far corner something very bright, sparkling just like a diamond. I instantly made up my mind that the sinister-eyed fellow with the broad-brimmed hat was in my room for the purpose of robbery, perhaps murder. I knew I should have to act quickly. I reached for my navy, and taking aim at the diamond, fired. There was a terrific report, and the body of the villain fell to the floor with a crash. When a light was obtained he was as dead as a door nail. In the morning we looked for the bullet, and also the diamond, which was missing. We found them both imbedded in the wall of the room. The diamond had gone through the unfortunate man's heart and lodged, with the bullet, in the wall."—The Bohemian.

Hunting Turkeys in Georgia.

The boys on Wallan's Creek, Georgia, have adopted a novel way to catch wild gobblers. When they take it into their heads to make a raid on this monstrous wild bird, they simply provide themselves with fleet horses and a pack of dogs as their only implements of warfare. Thus equipped they hie away to the woods, and when they find their game they simply put spurs on their horses and proceed to chase as though it were a fox instead of a turkey. A fat gobbler, it is said, cannot fly a great distance, and when he pitches, if on the ground, he takes to his heels till he is so closely pursued by the dogs that he is compelled to resort again to his wings for safety. Thus the chase is kept up continuously until the gobbler becomes completely fagged out and can neither run nor fly, when, of course, he has to succumb to his pursuers.

A man born at sea cannot be proud of his native land.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

The Sweet By and By.

The author of the well-known song, "The Sweet By and By," S. Fillmore Bennett, of Elkhorn, Wis., denies in the Chicago Indicator that he and the composer were drunk when they wrote the words and music of that song, as has been charged. Neither of them were drunk. Bennett was at his place of business when Webster, who was of a nervous and sensitive nature and easily susceptible to depression, came in, in one of his melancholy moods.—"What's the matter now?" asked Bennett. "It's no matter," he answered; "it will be all right by and by." "The idea of the hymn came to me like a flash," says Bennett, "and I replied: 'The Sweet By and By!' Why would not that make a good hymn?" "Maybe it would," he said, indifferently. Turning to the desk, Bennett then wrote the three verses of the hymn. "In the meantime two friends, N. H. Carswell and S. E. Bright, had come in," says Bennett. "I handed the hymn to Mr. Webster. As he read it his eyes kindled, and his whole demeanor changed.—Stepping to the desk he began writing the notes in a moment. Presently he requested his violin, and played the melody. In a few moments more he had the notes for the four parts of the chorus jotted down. I think it was not over thirty minutes from the time I took my pen to write the words, before the two gentlemen before named, myself and Mr. Webster were singing the hymn, in the same form in which it afterward appeared. While singing it, Mr. R. R. Crosby, now a resident of Richmond, Ill., came in, and, after listening awhile, with tears in his eyes, uttered the prediction: 'That hymn is immortal.' I think it was sung in public shortly after, for within two weeks almost every child on the streets was singing it." It is translated into several languages and "sung in every land under the sun."

Incident of the War.

A gentleman of our acquaintance related to us recently an incident of the war that was new to us, and is worthy of record. The farm of a gentleman named McLean constituted a part of the field upon which the first battle of Manassas was fought on the memorable 21st of July, 1861. Believing that the section of Virginia in which he resided would be the theatre of future conflicts, he concluded to seek a more peaceful location, where he would not be disturbed by the tramp of armies and the havoc of battles, and, after mature consideration and careful search, decided the locate in Appomattox county. He sold his farm, purchased a residence at Appomattox Court-House, and removed his family and household effects to that point, supposing himself to be secure from the invasion of the contending hosts. Four years thereafter the remainder of Gen. Lee's army made their last stand at Appomattox Court-House, and, strange to say, the articles of surrender were drawn up and signed in McLean's house. He had seen the beginning and the end of the great conflict.—Charlottesville Chronicle.

KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within, its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

WHAT HAPPENED TO MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

Stone in the Kidney Expelled after Using Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" About two Weeks.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1871, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" —experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. The "Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York.

Whitlows.

Whitlows are among the most painful ailments to which we are liable. Most of the suffering, however, could be avoided if they were properly treated and attended to at once. There are three kinds of whitlows.

The least troublesome is an inflammation of the skin on some part of the finger, generally due to an animal poison absorbed in some slight scratch or abrasion. Cooks and poultry-dealers are specially subject to it from the handling of "high" game. There is not much swelling, but the inflammation tends to spread up the finger and the hand. It is readily checked by applying to it, and a little beyond the reddened part, a pretty strong solution of nitrate of silver.

The second kind of whitlow usually appears about the nail, or the tip of the finger, and is due to some slight, perhaps unnoticed, injury. Pus forms rapidly under the skin, and there is a severe, throbbing pain. This can be at once and easily relieved by opening the skin above it. If—as is sometimes the case—it is under the nail, the pus may be reached and let out by carefully cutting away the edge of the nail; or, if it is near the roots, by paring down the nail with a sharp knife.

The third kind—generally called a felon—is an inflammation and suppuration beneath the membrance (periosteum) that covers the bone. It is usually on the last, spongy joint of the finger. If left to itself, the pus will work to the surface. But the process is very slow and very painful, and results in destroying the terminal bone. Treating it with "soap and sugar" and poultices is worse than useless. Have a physician open it to the bone—the earlier the better, both in relieving the pain and saving the joint.

The English Corn Laws.

Much as we hear said about the English corn laws, it is to be doubted if many people know just what they were. England has nearly always had duties both upon the importation and exportation of corn; in former times duties were imposed upon its removal from one part of the country to another. The duty upon the exportation of corn was finally abolished in 1814. The duty upon importations has varied greatly from time to time. In 1815 (against the strong opposition of the commercial classes,) the agricultural interest succeeded in fixing the high figure of 80 shilling as the limit at which there should be no duty on importation. This was the law to which the distress of England was especially due. During the course of the next ten years the voice of the poor had time to make itself heard. The distress soon became so dire and the pressure so great, that efforts were made by government in the direction of modifying the duties. In 1828, the law was changed, and a minimum of duty of one shilling was fixed when the price was 73 shillings or more, with the maximum duty of 23 shillings eight pence, when the price was 64 shillings. In 1842 the government of Sir Robert Peel enacted what was called the "Sliding Scale," fixing a minimum of duty of one shilling when the price was 57 shilling or more, and adding one shilling to the duty for each decrease of one shilling in the price until the maximum duty of 20 shillings was reached. At last, in 1846, Sir Robert Peel carried through his measure, reducing the duties at once, and fixing them at a nominal rate after an expiration of three years.

A Police Officer in Paris.

Chief of Police McGarrigle, of Chicago, now in Paris, writes as follows to Mayor Carter Harrison: "I shall avoid giving you a description of our sight-seeing, of the difficulties of the language. They say 'we' when they mean 'yes,' and toot sweet for 'presently,' and harry koverr for 'string beans,' and come ben for 'how much,' and then the cab-drivers are always trying to run over people, nor is there ever policemen to assist ladies or any one else across the streets and boulevards, no matter how crowded or dangerous they may be.

"The police are good shaped fellows, with a tolerable uniform and a heavy bayonet-sword hanging over the left hip. What are the precise duties of these officers I have not yet found out. They don't seem to be doing anything except walking about in couples.

"I wrote last week to the Prefect of Police inclosing a letter of introduction from the French Consul at Chicago, requesting him to inform me when I might do myself the pleasure of calling upon him. Up to this date he has not had the politeness to answer my request. Yesterday, however, I called at the American Legation and Minister Morton, who received me most kindly, will use the influence of his position to put me in the way to learn something of the Paris police system."

Dry Quarters for Swine.

Perhaps there is nothing more certainly damaging to a litter of pigs, or, for that matter, to swine of any age, than to have access to, and habitually lie upon a manure pile. Men who build basement stables, giving the story above the basement such width as will afford a shed upon one or both sides, permitting manure to accumulate beneath these, thus inviting swine to seek a nesting place in these accumulations, might as well erect a dead fall, with capacity enough to crush the swine stock kept in a barn yard provided with such a hot-bed nesting place. We have known of dire calamity overtaking swine that made their nest in manure beneath the shed. In one case, high-bred swine to the value of two thousand dollars, or over, were swept away by what the owner preferred to call hog cholera, but which was nothing less than congestion of the lungs, followed by a low form of inflammation. A harassing cough followed each animal up until it died; a few, perhaps one in twenty, lingered through the summer, gaunt, wasted, and coughing. Several litters of very valuable pigs were lost with this lot, the young pigs succumbing rapidly, as a matter of course.—National Live-Stock Journal, Chicago.

The only way by which capital can increase is by saving. If you spend as much as you get, you will never be richer than you are.

The Detestable and Pernicious Cigarette.

During the present year there has been a remarkable decrease in the sale of cigarettes as compared with the corresponding period of 1881. For the first five months of 1881 the amount paid as cigarette-stamp duty to the Philadelphia office of internal revenue was $701.75. Up to May 31 of this year it was $568.63, or roughly, a decrease of seventeen per cent. Most of the cigarettes sold here are manufactured in New York, and the decrease of those brought from that city is believed to be about one-third. A tobacco man who has recently been unbosoming himself to a reporter, and who is strongly opposed to cigarettes as pernicious, was interviewed on the subject. "It is in the warm weather," he said, "that the cigarette manufacturer banks money, but this year his profits will not be so large as they generally have been. The young man and the small boy, who both wanted to delude the public by pretending that they were neither young nor small, formerly invested in a packet of cigarettes and a box of matches, and started down street on their mission of deception. Of course, nobody was imposed on but themselves, and this gradually dawned on them as, in process of time, they found that what was to have made them manly really broke down their constitutions and ruined their health. Soon, therefore, they began to throw away the little rolls of supposed tobacco. There are still some people, however, upon whom the seductive passion for these [illegible] itself to stay, and it is notorious that this mania is nearly always manifested when its slaves are riding on back platforms of horse-cars. As long as these men commit slow suicide in the seclusion of their own chambers it is their affair, but when they come to inflict on harmless women and children fumes of cigarettes it is different, which are poisonous and worse than the fumes of anything else. Women of weak constitutions can be made ill by cigarette smoke. I think they should be warned about these effects of their practice. I haven't any sympathy with them, and of course they are at liberty to die by whatever death they prefer to, but I look on the abolition of cigarette smoking especially as a public benefit. — Philadelphia Times.

The Dry Goods Clerk.

The dry goods clerk is a young man who is paid $12.50 a week to stand behind a counter and sell dry goods. If he can conceal his real feelings, and be polite to old ladies who ask for samples of seventeen different pieces of calico, his employers sometimes increase his weekly pay to $15. Five dollars goes for board; the other ten he invests in clothes, hair oil, and the hire of a buggy on Sunday. He wears his hair pasted down on his forehead in a half circle, and is the proprietor of a sweet smile, which spreads all across his countenance and diffuses itself over the whole establishment when the up-town young ladies call to get a ribbon matched. He assures these young ladies that it is "no trouble to show goods;" he is respectfully deferential to matrons with marriageable daughters; is charmingly familiar with country customers, and dignified and noncommittal with male purchasers who forget whether it was four yards of blue insertion or a quart of foulard mainsook double-width striped hose that they were told to get.

The dry goods clerk wears a seal ring and a gorgeous expanse of shirt cuff. When a customer has got all he has ordered, the clerk says, "Anything else?" and then, in a very affluent voice, shouts "Cash!" When he returns the customer's change he again says "Anything else?" Why he says it we cannot understand, as no one has ever known the query to cause a customer to purchase even an additional shirt button.

After the store is closed in the evening, the dry goods clerk refreshes himself by rolling up the pieces of goods that, in the course of business, he has opened during the day, and in discussing the financial and social standing and the imperfections of character of the old ladies who have an insatiable craving for samples but who never buy anything.

The dry goods clerk lives in a boarding house, in an 8x10 room that has a small window opening on the back yard, through which the dying echoes of the smell of cooked codfish balls may be distinctly heard as they gently float from the kitchen on the evening breeze. His ambition in life is to marry some girl whose father will set him up in business, or to be a drummer.

The announcement is now made that the Brooklyn bridge will not be open for traffic till July 4, 1883.

When a certain prince of Salm-Salm came during the civil war to offer his sword to the federal government, his title puzzled Mr. Seward. "Psalm—Psalm!" he exclaimed, where does he come from?" "Perhaps from Sing Sing," said the person addressed.

Gen. Grant's son-in-law, Algernon Sartoris, is to swim a race with another man on the Thames in June for $1,000 a side. And yet some persons feared when Nellie Grant married Sartoris that she was getting a mere nobody.—The young man, it appears, has talent.

A member of the rhetorical class in a certain college had just finished his declamation when the professor said: "Mr. ——, do you suppose a general would address his soldiers in the manner you spoke that piece?" "Yes, sir, I do," was the reply, "if he was half scared to death."

Scipio, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1879.

I am the Pastor of the Baptist church here, and an educated physician. I am not in practice, but am my sole family physician, and advise in many chronic cases. Over a year ago I recommended your Hop Bitters to my invalid wife, who has been under medical treatment of six of Albany's best physicians several years.—She has become thoroughly cured of her various complicated diseases by their use. We both recommend them to our friends, many of whom have also been cured of their various ailments by them.

Cairo, N. Isaac Hoffman and Frank Rennie have also been cured of Sick Headache and Dyspepsia by their use. Westel Salsbury says they have been used by himself and family to great advantage; have cured his daughter of Sick Headache. The Bitters seem to be just the medicine for the diseases for which they are recommended.

Black Birch for Furniture.

Black birch is rapidly coming into favor. Black birch is a close-grained, handsome wood, and can be easily stained to resemble walnut exactly. It is just as easy to work, and is suitable for nearly, if not all, the purposes to which walnut is at present applied. Birch is much the same color as cherry, but the latter wood is now scarce, and consequently dear. It is with difficulty that cherry wood can be obtained at fifty dollars a thousand feet, while birch wood can be purchased at any saw-mill for one dollar per thousand feet. When properly stained it is almost impossible [illegible] and walnut, as it is susceptible of a beautiful polish, equal to any wood now used in the manufacture of furniture.

The Height of Folly.

To wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, is the height of folly, when you might be easily cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known sickly families made the healthiest, by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

The following is a description of one Utah town, but it is said it will apply to many of them: "Everything is Mormon. The biggest shop is the co-operative store; the biggest place of worship the Tabernacle; the biggest man the President of the Stake. Everybody that meets 'Brothers' or 'Sisters' each other in the streets, and after nightfall the only man abroad is the police force, who as a rule retires early himself, as the neighbors complain that his pacing the sidewalks disturbs their rest. Even the dogs are too well regulated to go about howling at moons."

The recent purchase at Halifax of the schooner Conquest, a vessel about twenty years old, by General Butler, which, as her clearances state, is bound for Madagascar, is exciting a great deal of conjecture at Halifax. Large quantities of stores, sufficient for thirty or forty men for nine months, were embarked, while but four persons sailed in her. It is believed that the Conquest will take on a crew elsewhere, and arms and ammunition have been received from Boston.

Further advices from the Sonora valley state that the number of hostile Apaches engaged in the raid is 200, commanded by Juh, the Chiricahua chief who escaped after the battle with General Fuero last spring. British troops have occupied Port Said and Ismailia and disarmed the native soldiers. Rear Admiral Hewitt has stopped traffic on the Suez canal, at which De Lesseps made a strong protest. At Port Said the British have thrown up earthworks between the European and Arab quarters, and Admiral Seymour and General Wolseley are on hand with seventeen transports and five men-of-war. The shore end of the cable, which has been worked from on board the ship John Pender, was landed Sunday. The announcement of an intention to bombard Aboukir seems to have been a ruse. Four English regiments landed at Aboukir and marched to the Mahmoudieh canal, drawing out shells from Arabi Pasha's force. The directors of the Suez Canal company held a meeting in Paris Sunday, at which resolutions were passed reaffirming the neutrality of the highway, denouncing the warlike measures of the British, and reserving the right to claim compensation from England.

Official information received at Omaha shows that an outbreak of the Sioux Indians at Pine Ridge agency is liable to occur, and a general war with the northern Indians is possible. Dr. McGillicuddy, agent of the Red Cloud Indians, has been notified that unless he is removed by October they will rise. The same statement is made by them to the military commanders, who have notified the army headquarters at Omaha. About 7,500 Indians are engaged in the trouble, and in their neighborhood about 11,000 more. It is estimated that 4,000 warriors can be summoned for the outbreak. What the grievances against the Pine Ridge agent are is not stated, and he bears an excellent reputation. It is thought by some that his rigid enforcement of the government regulations causes the Indians dissatisfaction. Red Cloud is thought to be actuating the Indians in their demand for the removal of Dr. McGillicuddy. It is further stated that many young men in the tribes have grown up since the war of 1876, and many warriors have returned who followed Sitting Bull, and that these elements are anxious for war.

Jesse Hoyt, one of the best known New York merchants, died at his residence Monday in that city, where he was born in 1815. Mr. Hoyt began his commercial career as a clerk in a grocery house and succeeded to a partnership, withdrawing in 1838 to enter the grain commission business with his father. The grain business at that time was restricted to transactions in flour, the subsequent development of what is now known as the grain trade being greatly due to Mr. Hoyt's energy and ability. Mr. Hoyt was especially active in the erection of elevators and in improving the facilities for storing and handling grain, and was prominently identified with the elevator system of Chicago and Milwaukee, having built the first railroad elevator in the latter city. Having great confidence in the resources of the west, he purchased a vast tract of land in the Saginaw valley of Michigan; in preparing for the clearing of the land, while sinking wells, he discovered the salt deposits which have grown to so great importance. Mr. Hoyt was at the time of his death president of the Flint and Pere Marquette Railroad company, and an officer in many business corporations and associations. He leaves an estate valued at $10,000,000.

OUR friends in all parts of the county are requested to inform us of any and all items of interest that may come under their personal observation. As a rule, to a certain extent, newspapers are what their readers make them. We have been and are still receiving many favors from a number of parties and we fully appreciate their kindness in our behalf.

DEERFIELD is figuring for the new railroad. The Record says: "The prospects are favorable that Deerfield will soon have another railroad. The proposed Ohio & Michigan line from Toledo to Tecumseh, and thence northwest, will probably strike very near this village. We have now two railroads, although one is not much of a benefit to the place."

Morenci Observer: The Fulton Co. commissioners, at their session on Monday last, located a ditch in Royalton township, which is a model rival of the famous Bean Creek cana. It is eight and three-fourths miles long, from two and one-half to seven feet deep, and from three to six feet wide on the bottom. The course of the water will be north into Michigan.

THE merchant and manufacturer in these days who sits down in his store-room or workshop and waits for the public instead of calling upon them through the press, will generally live long enough to look out with discontent upon his own ruin, while his next neighbor is prosperous and contented. Judicious advertising has advantages which no sane man doubts.

WE have received from the secretary, G. W. Clough, a copy of the premium list of the first annual fair of the Brooklyn Fair Association. The fair will be held Sept. 12, 13, 14 and 15, and competition is open to the world. If pluck wins, and it certainly ought, Brooklyn will undoubtedly have a good fair.

It has saved my life!"

Morenci Observer: An intelligent business man, whose official capacity unusually qualifies him to speak, says the expense to which our village corporation has been put, in some years past, in repairing the principal streets, would long ago have constructed a substantial paved avenue. And he thinks to this must we sooner or later arrive, else there will be continued and perpetual trouble and outlay to make the streets respectable.

Stephen Davy has purchased and is moving the old school house in District No. 6. Work will begin on the new one in a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Doty and son, of Castline, Ohio, have been visiting in Franklin. Mr. D. is a locomotive engineer, running from Castline to Chicago; and it was 21 years ago when he last visited his old home in Franklin.

We learn that Mrs. Albert Howard, mother of Mrs. A. J. Tuttle, died very suddenly at her home in Cambridge last Monday. The latter was preparing to wash when she complained of a pain near the heart, and death, caused by an eruption of a blood vessel, followed in 20 minutes.

Chas. C. Smith has purchased the piece of land owned by Matthew Boyd, which will now extend his farm to the turnpike.

Davis, of the monumental works, is receiving several car loads of stock at Britton and hauling it with teams to Tecumseh. He says it is considerable cheaper for him than to have it freighted to Tecumseh.

Rev. John McElwain, of Clinton, addressed our people last Sunday evening on temperance in a very acceptable manner. We shall be glad to hear him again.

The youngest child of G. W. Jackson, aged 8 months, died very suddenly last Tuesday morning. Services were held at the church Wednesday.

Our people are willing to "enthuse" again for the T. & M. railroad if there is any prospect for the line to be built. A meeting was held at W. H. Amer's shop last Monday P. M., and addressed by S. C. Stacy, of Tecumseh. The farmers in this vicinity were well represented, and an interest manifested which resulted in reappointing the old soliciting committee to take hold of the matter of renewing the notes heretofore given until December 1st, 1883, and to obtain new notes, if possible. The right of way secured two years ago is still held under the agreement then made and will not have to be renewed. The committee, W. H. Arner, E. C. VanVleet, Thos. H. Temple, G. W. Jackson. D. W. Loree and two or three others, are at work and report but little trouble in getting the notes renewed. The meeting adjourned to the Britton school house Saturday evening, this week, where a large attendance is expected.

A Voice From the Press.

I take this opportunity to bear testimony to the efficacy of your "Hop Bitters." Recognizing in God their author, I take pleasure in recommending them to all as the most perfect, pure and powerful tonic and medicine for family use. Some of my friends were nauseous and bitter and composed of bad whisky, we were greatly surprised at their mild taste, just like a cup of tea. A Mrs. Cresswell and a Mrs. Connor, friends, have likewise tried, and pronounce them the best medicine they have ever taken for building up strength and toning up the system. I was troubled with costiveness, headache and want of appetite. My ailments are now all gone. I have a yearly contract with a doctor to look after the health of myself and family, but I need him not now. S. Gilliland, People's Advocate, Pittsburg, Pa., July 25, 1878.

Mr. B. B. Bruce, of Cleveland, O., writes: "I felt generally unwell. Not desiring to get into the clutches of some rapacious doctor, I stepped into a drug store and inquired if they had a remedy that would cure anything and everything. The clerk promptly handed me a bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters. I said, 'Is it good for dyspepsia?' He replied, 'There's nothing better.' I said, 'My urine isn't just the right color, I guess my kidneys are out of order.' 'Just the thing, said he, 'for kidney disorders; you will find its strengthens all parts of the body, and very refreshing to the mental faculties.' 'Just the thing I want,' thought I, and it suited my complaint exactly. I never before believed in 'cure alls,' and now I make Brown's Iron Bitters the only exception, for I really believe it will relieve any disease that human flesh is heir to."

THE DEVILS LAKE PICNIC.

A Tremendous Crowd as Usual, and a Very Successful Meeting.

The Hillsdale and Lenawee farmers met at Beardsell's landing, Devil's Lake, on Thursday last in large numbers, the event of the annual meeting of a picnic association, which has flourished now for a full decade in these two foremost counties of the State. The event of the farmers' harvest picnic is always looked to with much interest by not only the farmers, their wives and families, but a large number of people in the cities and villages around, as the fact that many are in attendance each year from Adrian, Hillsdale, Tecumseh and Hudson will attest.

The morning of Thursday was not the most encouraging in the world for a fine day, but the picnickers were out in full force just the same, and although the fog was so dense as to almost obscure the farm dwellings and building from view along the road, the procession of vehicles en route for the picnic ground could be traced some distance ahead wending its way though the hills and dales at a lively rate to the lake.

The scene at Lake View was a varied one, and furnished a feast for the eyes. The grove was alive with watermelon, peanut, lemonade, chromo, tin-ware and notion dispensaries, whose urgent invitations to the throng congregated to "buy some, buy some," made the woods ring and re-echo with their harangues. The beautiful lake was swarmed with light sailing crafts, row boats, and the handsome steamer "City of Hudson." The dancing in the hotel and ten-pin game in progress in the alley added music to the scene and furnished heaps of enjoyment to the participants.

All this time the weather clerk had been busy at work to bring about the much prayed-for good weather, and his efforts were rewarded with eminent success. A little after ten the sun shown brightly, and the prospects were good for the usually clear picnic day. But where were all the farmer's wives and daughters that we had seen to enter the grounds with their "hubby's" and able-bodied lovers. Ah! now we see. Can it be possible they have spread that feast since we have been moving about the ground in an idle manner. Sure enough there it was to speak for itself. 'Twas just about noon, and it did spoil, too, and made our inner man speak and remind us that the days of Dr. Tanner had passed. Did we ever see a more lucious dinner spread? No, and we doubt if Delmonico would challenge our belief had he been present.

The first on the program after the festivities were at an end, was music by the Jerome band, which called the gathering about the speaker's stand to listen to Mr. J. E. Phelps, of Medina, whose great interest for the success of the baby show prompted him to announce that it would come off now, and that it would be in order to elect a committee of 3 ladies to act in conjunction with Mrs. Phelps and himself to decide which were the handsomest babies exhibited. Mrs. Calvin Crane, Mrs. Brackley Shaw and Mrs. T. T. McKenzie were chosen. The following ladies' babies were brought to the front: Mrs. David Cole, Rome; Mrs. Horace Coppins, Hudson; Mrs. Geo. F. Camburn, Wheatland; Mrs. E. Rugbee, Dover; Mrs. Chas. Atkinson, Hudson; Mrs. Wm. J. Marshal, Rome; Mrs. Chas. Upton, Rome; Mrs. Chas. Spring, Medina; Mrs. H. Burnam, Rome; Mrs. W. D. Harris, Rome; Mrs Wm. Foster, Rollin; Mrs. Geo. Lane, Wheatland; Mrs. Sophia Redfield, Woodstock; Mrs. Ann Spear, Woodstock; Mrs. Delia Russell, Somerset; Mrs. O. Cole, Addison; Mrs. Ida Childs, Moscow; Mrs. Frank White, Rollin; Mrs. Lell Hawley, Rome; Mrs. C. Tingley, Rollin; Mrs. Edgar Smith, Pittsford; Mrs. M. Parker, Addison; Mrs. S. Thorn, Wright; Mrs. M. Palham, Addison; Mrs. M. H. Cronk, Rollin; Mrs. B. J. Coller, Adrian; Mrs. Fremont Barker, Rollin; Mrs. Wm. Colwell, Moscow; Mrs. James Lombard, Rollin; Mrs. Frank Griswold, Rollin; Mrs. Chas. Oaks, Wheatland; Mrs. George Young, Wheatland; Mrs. James E. Norton, Hudson; Mrs. John Hand, Cambridge, and Mrs. E. Marshall, Rollin.

Out of these Mrs. B. J. Coller's, of Adrian, received the first premium, $4.00; Mrs. Wilford Cresp's, of Adams, second, $3.00, and Mrs. Geo. Taul, of Wheatland, third, $2.00.

Music was rendered by the Weston Glee Club, "Old Shady." Prayer offered by Rev. E. B. Brockway, of Canandaigua. The minutes of the last meeting were read by Secretary Harkness, when J. K. Boies, of Hudson, was introduced as the first speaker. He paid the members and officers of the association a high compliment for their persistency in making these harvest picnics of more interest, socially speaking, every year. The tendency of the human family was to associate and fraternize. Agriculture is the most important industry and regulates the prosperity of other pursuits and callings. Farming offers more inducements to young men at the present time than any other occupation. Land and lumber are rapidly increasing in price. This fact the farmer should bear in mind and put up all the building he should need at once. He showed that while farming produce of all kinds had increased in price since 1850, merchandise of all kinds had grown correspondingly cheaper. The importance of agriculture demanded from the legislation and protection from monopolies.

"Success to the Jolly Old Farmer" by the Glee Club.

The next speaker, L. H. Salsbury, of Hudson, was of the firm belief that the farmers, as a class, were the most happy and independent people on the face of the globe, and his convictions, he thought, were fully verified by the happy natures and faces he had come in contact with during the day. However the time had come when the farmer must take an important step toward remedying the great monopoly evil which is a sort of undying distress not only to them, but a large portion of the other people. The farmer must put an end to the thieving and jobbery of both parties by his ballot. Music by the Jerome band.

T. F. Moore, of Madison, was very eloquent also in his demonstrations of the present monopoly system on which our government is being run. He was loudly applauded at several times. He seems to fill the bill as speaker at a farmer's gathering better than the average orator. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Capt. Sam. Morey, Cambridge.

Vice President—Mrs. J. W. Allen, Rollin.

Secretary—Mrs. H. S. Russell, Hudson.

Treasurer—F. G. Clark, Wheatland.

Directors—Hudson, Walter B. Thompson; Medina, Henry J. Wirts; Cambridge, Frank A. Dewey; Dover, David Pontius; Seneca, Mark. C. Rorick; Rome, Martin Poucher; Moscow, Henry McCowan; Somerset, W. W. Morous; Wheatland, Austin Patrick; Pittsford, VanNess Schermerhorn; Wright, Thomas Acker; Adams, E. H. Jackson; Woodstock, A. M. Sickly.

It is estimated that 10,000 people were in attendance.

1,300 vehicles passed the gate before 4 P. M.

We understand that Mr. Beardsell, proprietor of the Lake View House, reaped nearly $1,500 from the crowd.

The Prophecy.

"There's many a slip 'twixt cup and lip."

BY MRS. E. V. WILSON.

A king of Thrace had vineyards fair to see,
Thick on the vines the purple clusters hung
Toiling among them once there chanced to be
A slave who copped with grapes his parching tongue.

The king beheld, and cried, "You pluck the fruit
That grows and ripens for your master's use!"
Then as the slave stood terrified and mute
He loaded him with blows and vile abuse.

When as he ceased, the sullen slave bent low,
And spoke as one who hail no words to waste,
"For you, O King, the luscious fruit may grow,
The wine it yields your lips will never taste."

The king laughed loud, and turning on his heel
Repeated to his courtiers, as a jest,
The prophecy, and said, "The knave shall kneel
And proffer us the wine when at its best."

Time passed, the red wine sparkled in the cups
The slave was summoned to the palace hall.
Lo, as he kneel, holding the vessel up
A voice rang out, that startled one and all.

"Ho, the king's vineyards; ho, the guards," it said,
[illegible]
And scaled the wall, the keepers all have fled,
Unchecked he layeth waste the royal grounds."

Up sprang the angry king, and seized his spear,
Thrusting the goblet and the slave aside.
"Let those," he cried, "carry behind who fear,"
I'll slay the beast whatever else betide."

The vineyard reached, with well-poised spear he ran,
And [illegible]
He thrust,
When rose a cry of horror from each man—
The king had slipped and fallen in the dust.

Fiercely the wounded boar upon him pressed,
Though twenty spearsmen strove his course to stay,
The sharp tusks entered the unguarded breast,
And side by side the beast and monarch lay.

As from the ground they raised the dying king,
His eyes fell on the slave's dark, sullen face.
"The wine," he gasped, "the wine, make haste and bring."
Death sealed his lips, the slave still kept his place.

UNCLE NAHUM'S WEDDING.

Uncle Nahum Nixon was reading the paper in his back parlor. Nobody would think, to look at the simple surroundings of the unpretentious apartment, that Mr. Nahum Nixon was one of the wealthiest men in town. The carpet, it was true, was Axminster, but it had seen twenty good years of service, and was worn down to the very warp; the faded red curtains were of moreen instead of satin damask; the old clock on the mantel was no Parisian affair of alabaster and gilt, but a substantial Connecticut time-piece that struck with a whirr, like a partridge springing out of her nest; the chairs of old-fashioned mahogany and haircloth stood bolt upright against the wall; the portraits of Gen. Washington on horseback and the surrender of Cornwallis ornamented the gray papered walls in frames of sombre gilt, and the one elegance of the apartment was a casket of preposterous wax flowers under a cracked glass shade.

But Uncle Nixon had remembered that furniture ever since he was a child, and he wouldn't have exchanged it for the fittings of a Parisian boudoir, or the choicest specimens of the modern Eastlake pattern. He was a rich man—that was quite enough for him.

"If you please, Mr. Nixon," said the trim little maid-servant, "Mr. Marmaduke Bourne wants to see you—if you please, sir, if you are quite at leisure."

"Mr. Marmaduke Bourne, eh!" The old gentleman took off his spectacles and laid them upon the folded newspaper. "Ask him in, Polly."

And Mr Marmaduke Bourne came in—a tall, fresh-colored young fellow with sparkling gray eyes, brown hair, all in a mat of curls, and a straight Greek nose that seemed as if it might have been borrowed from some ancient statute of Apollo.

"Well, sir?" said Mr. Nixon.

"Well sir," counter-interrogated Mr. Bourne, "did you get my letter?"

"I got your letter," said Uncle Nahum. "So you want to marry my niece Faith?"

"Yes, sir," valiantly acknowledged Mr. Marmaduke Bourne.

"Ah!" nodded Uncle Nahum. "But perhaps you don't understand all the facts of the case."

"The facts, sir?"

"I want my niece to marry Col. Ashland's son," slowly enunciated Uncle Nahum.

"But, sir, she don't love him."

"Pshaw!" snarled Uncle Nahum. "And if she don't marry him she'll be a beggar—I'll give her no money of mine. Now you understand matters. Marry her or not, as you please."

He took up the newspaper once more—a tacit intimation that the interview was at an end.

"Sir"—began Mr. Bourne.

"That'll do," said Mr. Nixon.

"I only wish to—"

"That'll do!" thundered Mr. Nixon; and so Marmaduke Bourne went away.

Little Faith Nixon came down stairs presently—a blue-eyed blossom of a girl, with yellow hair growing low on her forehead, and a very little mouth, exactly the shape to suggest the idea of kissing.

Uncle Nahum looked keenly up at her as she fluttered about the room, straightening a table cover there or patting down a curtain fold here.

"Yes," said he, with a curious twitch of the muscles around his eyes, "he has been here."

"I—I didn't ask any question, Uncle Nahum."

"No, but your eyes did," chuckled the old man. "He wants to marry you—the improvident young donkey!"

Faith came to her uncle's chair and laid her hand lightly on his shoulder.

"That isn't the worst of it Uncle Nahum—I want to marry him."

"Humph!" snarled Mr. Nixon, in high contempt. "And what do you expect to live on, I should like to know?"

"We can both work," said Faith, bravely.

"You're more likely to starve," said Mr. Nixon. "Mind—don't count on help from me. If you will get married, you do it at your own risk."

"Then you consent, Uncle Nahum?"

"No!" roared the old bachelor. "Nothing of the sort."

"But, Uncle Nahum, I should be wretched without Duke!" softly pleaded Faith.

"Fiddlestrings!" said the old man.

"And I'm sure he couldn't live without me."

"Trash!" grunted Mr. Nixon.

"And if you please, uncle," added Faith, "perhaps I'd better go to my friend Violet Smith's to make up my wedding things, since you disapprove so decidedly of my plans. She lives in New York, you know, and it will be convenient for shopping, and—"

"And for all the other tomfooleries in general," rudely interrupted the old gentleman. "Yes, go to your Violet Smith's, but don't expect to come back here."

"No, uncle," said Faith, meekly. "But you'll let me thank you for all your kindness, and—"

"No, I won't!" said Uncle Nahum, so shortly that poor Faith fled up-stairs in dismay and had a quiet little cry, notwithstanding she was so very, very happy.

For Uncle Nahum, brusque and crabbed though he was, was all the father she had ever known. But she packed her trunk and went to Violet Smith's in New York, which was all the pleasanter [illegible] betaken himself to this modern Gotham and gone to work studying law as if he meant to take Coke and Blackstone by storm. And Miss Violet Smith, who was a sentimental young lady, sympathized intensely, and the young couple were as unreasonably happy as many another couple has been before and will again.

But one day Duke Bourne came in with a face full of tidings.

"Faith," said he, "have you heard the news?"

"What news?" asked Faith.

"Your uncle will get the start of us, after all."

"What do you mean, Duke?"

"Why, he's going to be married."

"Uncle Nahum?" cried Faith, incredulously.

"Yes, Uncle Nahum. That accounts for his being so willing to get rid of us—eh, little one?"

"And who is the bride?" questioned Faith.

"Why, that's the mooted point yet. Nobody seems to know. Some say one, and some say another; but the general impression seems to be that it is the rich widow who owns the brown stone block on the corner."

"I'm sure I hope he will be happy," said Faith, with tremulous lips and eyes suffused with tears. "But—but think he might have said something to us about it."

"People are not generally in a hurry to proclaim the fact that they are about to make fools of themselves," said Duke Bourne bitterly.

"Why," cried Faith, laughing through her tears, "that is precisely what he said of us."

But the next day a letter from Uncle Nahum himself settled the matter. He wrote:—

"There is to be a wedding at my house on the seventeenth, and I want you and Duke to be there without fail."

"A wedding! At his house!" cried Faith. "I supposed weddings were celbrated at the bride's residence."

"So they are, dear," said Miss Smith; "but your uncle was always so eccentric."

"What shall we do?" asked Faith.

"Why, go, of course," said Marmaduke Bourne. "To show that we bear no malice at being disinherited, if for no other reason."

The seventeenth of March arrived, a cold, blustering night, and the old red brick house was all in a glimmer of lights as the young betrothed pair drew up to the door. Uncle Nahum met them on the threshold, in his old-fashioned swallow-tailed coat, with a huge white camelia in his button-hole and a pair of surprisingly white kid gloves.

"Have you brought your white frock?" was his first question to his niece.

"No, uncle, I—"

"That won't do," said Uncle Nahum. "No one must come to my wedding without a marriage garment. It's lucky I provided one for you. Come up-stairs, quick, and put it on, for the parson is waiting and the company are here."

"But, uncle, the bride?"

"You shall see her by-and-by," said Uncle Nahum, despotically. "Come up-stairs now and change your dress."

"But, uncle, a white silk!" cried Faith, looking in dismay at the glistening dress laid out for her use.

"What then? Isn't white silk the thing for a wedding? Put it on quick, and I'll send some one up to bring you down in five minutes."

And so, with a doubting heart, Faith Nixon robed herself in the white dress, with its trimmings of vapory blonde and long trail.

"Where's your veil?" said Uncle Nahum, when he came himself, a few minutes later, to the door.

"Uncle, I can't wear a veil," pleaded Faith.

"But you must!" said Uncle Nahum. "Nobody comes to my wedding without a veil." And he placed the wreath lightly on her head.

"But, Uncle Nahum, they will take me for the bride."

"Let 'em," said the old gentleman. "Take my arm. Now come down stairs, and I'll show you the bride. Here she is."

Lifting her bewildered eyes, Faith Nixon beheld her own figure reflected in a full length mirror at the stairway."

"Here's the bride," chuckled Uncle Nahum, leading her up to Duke Bourne, "and here's the groom," touching Bourne's shoulder. "And here's the parson, all ready and waiting. Now, reverend sir," to the clergyman, "marry 'em as fast as ever you can." And, before either of the astonished young people could remonstrate, they were made man and wife.

"Duke," cried the bride, as soon as the ceremony was over, "did you know of this?"

"No, I didn't," said Mr. Bourne, with his arm very tight around his little wife's waist. "But I must say I approve very highly of the whole proceeding."

Uncle Nahum stood by, rubbing his hands, with his whole face wreathed in one prodigious smile.

"So you supposed it was I who was to be married, eh?" said he. "Not a bit of it—not a bit of it. I'm too old a bird to be caught with such chaff as that. No, no, little Faith. Did you think I was going to turn my wee birdie out of her nest, after all the years she has been cherished there? No, no, I only wanted to assure myself that your fancy was a real fancy, and that this young rascal, here," smiting Bourne on the shoulder once more, "loved you for yourself alone and not for the money he thought the old man was going to leave you. And you're to live here, both of you, and we'll be happy ever after. Strike up your harps and fiddles. Let's have a dance—let's all be merry together."

Uncle Nahum Nixon himself led off the bridal quadrille, dancing in the good old style of fifty years ago.

"I can't have a wedding every day," said Uncle Nahum, breathlessly, as he cut one last pigeon wing, "and I mean to make the most of it."

A Scheme to Generate Electricity from a Horse's Hoofs.

"I've got a scheme on hand," said Bixler.

"What's that?"

"Electricity. Manufacture it wholesale, no cost, cheap as water. Every man makes his own."

"How's that?"

Friction. Horse's hoofs. See here," and he planted on the table a small, solid-looking walnut box, brass bound on the corners. "That's a Brush reservoir," he exclaimed triumphantly.

"What do you do with it?"

"Just stick it under the buggy seat when you go t drive. Horse's hoofs wrought iron. Constant friction against rock and clay generates acres of electricity. Wire run from each hoof to the box. Every last drop of 'lectricity picked up and stored. When you get home from the cliff or the park you've got fluid enough to light your house or run an engine. Great scheme. Millions in it."

"Tried it yet?"

"No; just going to. Wanted you to see it and give me a sendoff. Will you?"

"Yes."

"Come on," and he led the way out to the sidewalk and around into Webb street, where an alleged horse and buggy stood up without assistance near a post. The horse was a white and venerable animal, which had evidently received a diploma from some street car company and then turned out to study vegetable economy in a vacant lot. It seemed like a very docile animal; so docile that you might build a fire under it or hang a package of inflamed firecrackers to its bald-headed tail without exciting any particular indignation or unseemly anger on its part. It was a real good horse to try experiments with, and maybe it was good for something beside that, but not knowing the horse well we could not tell. The buggy was also admirably adapted for experimental investigation.

Bixler bustled and fidgeted, and finally got the box under the seat with four long wires reaching over the dashboard. These he passed along the harness and understraps on the horse's legs, clamping them to the upper side of the frog of the shoe. Then he got in.

"I'll just take a trip around the block and show you," he said, prodding his Arabian rapidly and hard with a toy club as he spoke. The old horse was finally waked up, but before starting he turned his head and thoughtfully studied the machinery on his legs for some time. He evidently did not understand it. He lifted his fore foot and then put it down again. He tried his hind foot, and suddenly let fly with it at the dashboard, straining his spine with the unaccustomed exertion, and looking both morose and gloomy, as if he felt hurt in his mind. Then he started down the street at a walk, while Bixler's eyes snapped and beamed with excitement.

Ten minutes later there was commotion on Kearney street. The roars of men, the shrieks of women and children, and a confused, collective yell of "Stop him!" shook the neighborhood. The riot came nearer and nearer; there was a sharp rattle and clatter, and suddenly the old horse, with his tail on end and his eyes glaring wildly, shot around the corner and down California in a mad, reaching gallop that would have turned a buffalo sick with envy. One hind wheel was gone—a lamp-post had captured it, and the other was running on spokes alone, and just as it passed our office a collision with a furniture wagon reduced the wreck to splinters, with the exception of two shafts and a small box which went bouncing along as the old horse kept on his wild journey on a beeline for the ferryboat. Bixler was thrown up in the air, and took a wild dive into a pile of auction mattresses. We hastened to his remains, but found them comparatively unhurt.

His crest was drooping and his manner gloomy, however. He looked ruefully after the white shadow disappearing like a comet down the street, and then said mournfully, but dubiously, "It's all right, all right. I only forgot to insulate the d—d horse."

Foolish Extravagance in Funerals.

Chicago is noted for the almost boundless extravagance of its funeral expenses. Poor people overwhelm themselves in debt in order to pay honor to the memory of the dead, whom too often they neglected or looked coldly on when living. Now this very fact shows that the practice is not so much out of love and affection as proceeding from a selfishness which sees credit reflected on the living in paraphernalia supposed to be intended to reverence the dead. It has been stated that laboring men are not seldom buried at an expense of from sixty to one hundred dollars. In instances of persons better off in this world's goods, capes, gloves, flowers, carriages, magnificently appointed hearses, and richly caparisoned horses, are indulged in. The extremely poor, even, dazzled by these "dumb shows," and blinded to their poverty by their grief and tears, wildly rush into the most ridiculous displays of extravagance. In some cases it is wilful, in others thoughtless, extravagance. In still others, the mere result of foolish and silly rivalry between families and neighbors.

There has been a fair average catch of seals on Neah bay and Quilleute, Washington territory, this season, but, owing to the advance in cost of catching, and decline in value in foreign markets, the season's business on the whole has been unprofitable.

The Silvery Moon.

Extraordinary Discoveries Made by a Delaware Astronomer.

The Delaware astronomer, J. G. Jackson, of Hockessin, who claims to have lately made some important discoveries in connection with the moon, spoke at length regarding his investigations. He said that he had found in looking at the new moon that a white mist was floating over a portion of what is known as the mare crisium, a group of volcanic formations, well known to astronomers. For an hour Mr. Jackson kept his telescope upon the spot, marking out clearly a large cloud of vapor arising several hundred feet above the promontarium agarum, which is at the base of the mare crisium. Owing to the fact that the terminator had moved over beyond the mare crisium Mr. Jackson was unable to witness the phenomenon on the following night. He said nothing at the time, fearing that he might have made a mistake, but he waited patiently for the next new moon, which occurred on June 17. At this trial he was baffled on account of the cloudiness of the weather. On last Sunday, however, all of the conditions were favorable, and he watched eagerly to test the correctness of his observations. Sure enough the feathery mist was there again on the western edge of the mare crisium against the promontarium agarum, as he had seen it on May 19. He watched it again until the moon had gone down in the west, and was fully confirmed of the extent and importance of the phenomenon as effecting existing theories regarding the physical condition of the moon, and her atmosphere. His notion is that this cloud forms by volcanic action during the lunar night of every month, and can only be seen for one particular evening at about forty-eight hours after conjunction (new moon), just as the rays of the morning sun in rising over the mountains of the promontarium agarum became sufficient to illuminate the west, but not yet intense enough to dispel or separate it.

The fact that the moon is then but a slender crescent generally low in the haze of our horizon, seen but an hour or so before setting, Mr. Jackson thinks must be the only reason why it has not been oftener witnessed. The importance of the discovery consists in that it establishes a fair promise for believing that the theory that the moon is a dead world is incorrect, and would appear to show what has for years been denied by nearly all astronomers, that the moon has an atmosphere.

On Thursday night last, Mr. Jackson claims, he made another discovery in connection with this wonderful cloud. He distinctly saw at the apex of the promontarium agarum, above which the cloud has been seen, three volcanic craters which have never before been discovered by astronomers, and he thinks that the cloud is produced by the bursting of volcanic fires which opened these new craters, thus further tending to establish the theory of physical life on the moon. Mr. Jackson says that when the great telescopes of the world are directed toward investigating this startling phenomenon he has no doubt that discoveries of incalculable importance will be made, which may revolutionize our present theories as to the physical condition of the earth's satellite.

Mr. Jackson is a most careful and painstaking scholar, and has been an astronomer for nearly half a century. Thirty years ago he calculated exactly the transit of Venus which took place in 1874, and has been a close student of celestial phenomena ever since. He was four years ago nominated for congress, and ran against Col. Martin, the present member from Delaware.—Philadelphia Press.

Jersey 'Skeeters.

The Jersey mosquito has long furnished excuse for wild flights of fancy, but he has never before inspired anybody quite as thoroughly and overwhelmingly as he did the captain of the British bark Emanuel Swedenborg, who has made affidavit, in the ordinary sailor fashion, that off Cape May he sailed into a vast army of mosquitoes, ravenous from their long flight, which took complete possession of the vessel and all on board. In five minutes they had drawn as much blood as ever an old-time doctor drew from a fever patient, and within half an hour they had succeeded in boring through the captain's thickest winter overcoat. "I was driven almost desperate," he declares, "and I climbed up the main-top, thinking to escape the ferocious animals. You may know how glad I was when I found that they had not got up so far. The first mate called to me to know how it was up there. I told him to come up and to bring as many of the men aloft as could be spared. This he did, and there we stayed all night. When supper time came our Chinese cook went below, and filled a basket with cold victuals, which we hoisted up to our perches in the shrouds. The men took hour-turns in going down on deck and managing the vessel. We slept aloft, as we feared to venture on the deck. About 4 o'clock a stiff breeze sprung up, and the mosquitoes began leaving us. Many of them stayed on the boat, however, until we reached Delaware. At the Breakwater I attempted to send a dispatch to the consignees in Philadelphia, but my hands were bitten so badly that I was unable to write, and had to get the telegraph operator to pen the message." When the captain's British friends hear of this they will have a worse opinion than ever of New Jersey.

Mr. Jotham Johnson, of Durham, Me., is described as a somewhat remarkable man. He is now 96 years old, but in good health, and as active as most men of 70. His wife died three years ago at the age of 92, after living with her husband seventy-two years. Mr. Johnson followed the sea, beginning at the age of 7. He never uses glasses, and has good, natural teeth, as well as a fine head of hair, white and curly.

It has been clearly established by the evidence presented at London police courts that the "penny dreadfuls," or cheap novelettes, of which boy highwaymen are the heroes, have produced an abundant crop of young thieves, who have only imitated the adventures described with devilish ingenuity by the romance writers.

Hunting for a Storm with the Thermometer.

Last Tuesday a [illegible] looking man walked into Solon L. Mott's warehouse, in Beekman street. The machinery of the thermometer pointed to 96, but the man wore an overcoat and had a very uneasy expression in the neighborhood of the eyes.

"Is this Mr. Mott?" he asked, approaching that gentleman.

"Well, yes," said Mr. Mott, with the air of a man who doesn't propose to give any testimony calculated to implicate himself; "that's what people call me after I have had my dinner."

"I'm very glad to see you," said the man with the overcoat. "Might I look at some of your largest stoves?"

"Why, certainly!" exclaimed Mott, his reserve melting like a collared worm in a pot of boiling water. "Why, of course. We are glad to show our wares. Just come this way."

He carried the man to the stove department, and the latter paused in front of a large heater, which seemed to be made for warming up a five-acre barroom. The man walked around it, examined it carefully, and finally drew up a chair and sat and gazed at it with an expression of rare enjoyment. Mott went through the regulation address; the stove was the best and most substantial ever built; it burned less coal and gave out more heat to the square inch than all other stoves put together. The man listened eagerly; indeed, he appeared to be entranced; but he said nothing.

Other customers coming in called Mott's attention away from the man with an overcoat, and it so happened that he remained in another part of his establishment until some time in the afternoon. When he came back he was astonished to find the man still sitting where he had left him. He was not asleep; on the contrary, he was keenly alert, and the halo reflected from the bottom of a glittering dish-pan lit up a magnificent rural smile.

"Hello! exclaimed Mott; "has my stove paralyzed you. I told you it was a stunner. It is one of those kinds of stoves that never desert you if you stay by them; and it is dirt cheap."

"Well, sir; I hope you will dispose of it to an advantage," said the stranger, taking a chew of tobacco and buttoning his overcoat more closely around him; "it's a mighty nice concern. It may seem funny to you, sir, but I'm from Florida, and when I came here I was nearly frozen, and—"

"Nearly frozen!" yelled Mott; "why great drops of perspiration are oozing from the thermometer."

"Well, sir, said the man firmly, but with an air of humility, "I was raised in Florida. I came here to enjoy myself, but I find you lack climate. Climate, sir, is everything. Even an overcoat don't bring up your climate to the standard. I am going home, and if I ever come back here again I shall take care to come prepared to buy one of your biggest stoves."

The Mule, the Editor and the Contraband Whisky.

Not long since the editor of the Raleigh News and Observer went into the mountains near Waynesville, N. C., for a vacation. At Franklin, the county seat of Macon, he endeavored to hire a horse for a several days' hunting and fishing expedition. Cunningham, the proprietor of the hotel and livery, informed him that he had no horses suitable, but he could hire him a mule for the purpose.

"Blast your mules!" said the editor; "they kick."

"This one never kicks," rejoined Cunningham.

"I never heard of any but dead ones being free from that vice," said the editor.

"Well, I'll warrant this one," returned Cunningham, emphatically.

The editor, on this assurance, took the mule and departed. Well, he was kicked as anticipated, and laid up several weeks, much to his injury, physically and financially. When he returned to Franklin he paid for the mule hire, and then presented Cunningham with a bill, for payment, of $75 as damages. Cunningham winced, deferring payment for a few days. In the meantime the editor grew thirsty, and Cunningham, at his request, sent his "nigger" over the mountain to a licensed still or grocery for some whisky. Soon after the whisky arrived, Cunningham, with the ostensible purpose of settling the $75 matter, went with a friend into the editor's room. Two bottles of whisky were on the table.

"What do I owe you," asked the editor, "for your nigger's trip to the grocery?"

"Oh, answered Cunningham, "I'll take a drink of whisky for it. The nigger's services for the whisky."

"All right," returned the editor, and Cunningham poured and drank.

"Now," said Cunningham, how about the $75!"

"You must pay it," answered the editor.

"I'll pay nothing," began Cunningham, in a set manner. "I think I have you. If you don't give me a receipt in full for all damages you consider me liable for, I'll have you arrested before nightfall. You have just sold me whisky without license! Here's my witness, and Thornton Rogers, United States Commissioner, lives across the street. He will issue a warrant on my affidavit. Your conviction would be certain, and so would a year's imprisonment."

The editor laughed at first, and then grew pale. A compromise was agreed upon, no money or notes being paid over or exchanged, Cunningham being ahead by a free yearly subscription for the Raleigh News and Observer.

Her Mistake.

"Why do you suppose Rev. Johnson Reed is always driving over to Smithville?" asked one Austin gentleman of another. "His wife says he goes over to admire the beauty of the place," was the reply. "Yes; but does his wife know the beauty of the place is a young widow?"—Texas Siftings.

There was a hair-pin on the White Street Bridge this morning. It was a very little thing, was this hair-pin, and a thoughtless public passed unconsciously over it. But while it was a trifle on the bridge it was a power somewhere else. Sleepers: A sleeper is one who sleeps. A sleeper is that in which the sleeper sleeps. A sleeper is that on which the sleeper which carries the sleeper while he sleeps runs. Therefore, while the sleeper sleeps in the sleeper the sleeper carries the sleeper over the sleeper under the sleeper until the sleeper which carries the sleeper jumps off the sleeper and wakes the sleeper in the sleeper by striking the sleeper under the sleeper, and there is no sleeper in the sleeper on the sleeper.

An Exemplification.

He was one of those opinionated men who are especially pleased to express their views in public places; the conversation had turned upon a recent bold robbery, and he had just fixed the attention of all the passengers in the car upon a demure looking young man who sat next to him, by addressing him sotto voice: "Now, I'm a detective and you stole that money."

As a matter of fact, the young man had not stolen anything, nor was the older man accusing him; he was simply about to explain to the unsophisticated youth how detectives operate in running down a criminal. He was playing detective and had cast the young man as the thief, just for instance, you know, and, warming to his subject, feeling that he had his illustration splendidly in hand, the old man settled right down to business.

"You stole that money," he repeated, "and I'll show you how easily you tripped yourself up."

Everybody in the car became intensely interested.

"Last evening," continued the old man, "a person answering your description was observed by several parties to pass and repass the scene of the robbery."

Here the lady who sat next the young man left her seat and stood up in the far end of the car.

"Footprints made by boots exactly of your size were discovered in the yard and on the roof of the wagon shed by your entrance was effected, and a piece of the very goods from which your clothes are made had been torn out and was found adhering to a sharp point of the iron work."

About this time the young man became conscious that he had for some reason been singled out by the passengers as an object of great interest, and it suddenly occurred to him that they might think the old man's remarks were personal to himself. He endeavored to get in a word or two, but the old man would brook no interruption.

"But that's not all," he went on; "a servant girl discovered your presence, the alarm was given, a shot fired at your retreating figure which penetrated your hat."

Here the passengers noticed a pair of clean cut holes in the young man's hat. The evidence was complete. Murmurs of "What a pity!" "So young, too!" "The little scoundrel! greeted the young man's ears.

Crimson and speechless, in his mortification he fled the car, followed by all of the passengers but the old man.

"Going to let him get away?" asked the conductor.

"Yes," responded the old man, keeping up the joke; "I pity the poor boy."

"Well, you'll have to pay his fare, then. I didn't get it." And that's where the joke turned on the old man. —Cincinnati Saturday Night.

Her Two Happiest Years.

Here's a story told me recently.—About 30 years ago Judge Cincinnatus Peeples—bless his genial memory!—found it necessary to order a tanner out of his law office in Hall county. The tanner was a poor shiftless fellow named Wilson, and shortly after drifted to Atlanta, where he secured work at 50 cents a day. In 1868 Judge Peeples went to New York on important financial business for the state. He was directed to the great banking house of R. T. Wilson & Co. He sent in his card, and after waiting a while was ushered into an elegant office. A fine-looking man introduced himself as Wilson, and reminded the judge that he was the poor tanner he had ordered out of his office many years ago. Judge Peeples, thoroughly astonished, never dreamed that this ex-tanner was the head of the bank, but thought he was probably related to the proprietor and had secured a clerkship. Mr. Wilson invited the judge to dine with him, and at 5 o'clock the judge found himself in one of the finest houses on Fifth avenue. While awaiting his host a superb lady entertained him, and Judge Peeples was overwhelmed with the consciousness that the day laborer had really become the great banker. He then became uneasy for fear he should drop some allusion to the humble origin of the husband of the splendid lady to whom he was talking. At length she said:

"Judge Peeples, where do you think I spent the two happiest years of my life?"

The judge thought of Saratoga, and Venice, but was hesitating, when Mrs. Wilson said:

"Why, at Papa Wilson's log cabin in Hall county, where my husband took me when we were first married."—New Orleans Times.

A Brave Recruit.

Tom was a very good boy, sharp and intelligent, but had the reputation of being a coward. Almost anything would excite his nerves of timidity. But he got patriotic when the war began and entered in the three months' service. He was in the skirmishes on several occasions, but was in no regular battle. He behaved splendidly, and almost blotted out the reputation he had at home. The boys in his company had all confidence in him. When Tom returned home he knew more of the world than he did when he left. Some of his old chums who did not go to war edged around him to hear him talk. "Boys, you may laugh and wink," said Tom, "but you don't know what hard times is; you couldn't spell it in less than three months."

"Tell us, Tom, how it was."

"Well, sir, for a whole week at a time we had nothing but hot biscuit, butter and chicken and all such light diet as that to live on. It's no wonder I am weaker."

"Well, Tom, how about the fighting?"

"I'll tell you; according to my record, I killed as many of them as they did of me!"

They went fishing. She looked languidly at him and said, "I wish the fish would bite at your hook; if I was a fish I would.

The County and Representative Conventions will be next on the program.

Soldier's reunions and political contime a man has these days.

The days are growing longer, convention delegates are multiplying, candidates are getting on the race track, and the band has already begun to play.

There are two Congressional tickets already in the field in the Second district, the Republicans and Greenbackers having taken the field. The Democratic Convention has not yet been called.

When Hon. John K. Boies returned to Hudson last Saturday evening he was tendered a serenade by his fellow citizens which he acknowledged in a very neat and appropriate address. The residents of Hudson without regard to party have cause to indulge in a little glorification over the advancement of their fellow citizen.

We predict that John K. Boies will develop good running qualities. He is a first-class business man, an enterprising citizen, and a man of high personal worth. And his success in his own business affairs shows that he generally succeeds in whatever he undertakes. His election is reasonably certain, unless the opposition shall unite and trot out their very best man.

The Republican newspaper organs are very much disgusted with the Union state ticket of the Democrats and Nationals, which, of courge, was to be expected. The leaders did not consult the newspaper editors of the opposing party, which was a sad oversight. The Democrats and Nationals, however, seem to be well pleased with the situation, which is suggestive, to say the least.

So far as the state tickets before the people are concerned voters can cast their ballots this fall with some degree of satisfaction. Those who favor keeping the Republican party in power, under its present leadership, can vote that ticket, knowing that their votes will not be thrown away. On the other hand all electors who honestly believe that the best interests of the state demand a change, can unite upon a ticket equally as good, with a reasonable prospect of success. The minority will pull together this fall, and the counting of the ballots may reveal the fact that it has grown to be a majority.

What was the cause which led to Mr. Willitts' defeat for a Congressional nomination? He had made a faithful representative, his record in Congress had been especially good, and he was the only man in the Michigan delegation who had opposed the big steal. We present our theory of it: Last winter, during the post-office war in Adrian, Mr. Willitts refused to use his influence to prevent a removal, which he could undoubtedly have done Shortly afterwards he lent his influence to the removal of a tried and faithful postmaster in Tecumseh. His refusal to act in the former case antagonized an influence at Adrian, which in the Lenawee County Convention carried the 2d district for Boies. His action in the second instance referred to antagonized a powerful influence at Tecumseh, which carried the first district for Boies in the County Convention. The sixteen delegates from these two districts taken from Boies and given to Willitts would have insured the nomination of the latter without any serious contest. This little scrap of local history serves to illustrate both the uncertainty of politics and the beauties of the "spoils" system.

Adrian Times: Governor Jerome has reappointed S. B. Mann, of Palmyra, to the commission to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases in cattle. The last legislature failed to make appropriations to enable the commission to do any work, but the next legislature will be asked to, and probably will, rectify the omission.

THE CONGRESSIONAL CONTEST.

John K. Boies, of Hudson, Walks Off with the Prize.

The Republican Congressional Convention convened at Adrian last Friday and continued in session until Saturday afternoon before a nomination was reached. The first forenoon was consumed in discussing the contests, which resulted in admitting the regular delegates from each county.

Upon reassembling after dinner balloting began for a candidate. The first ballot stood as follows:

J. K. Boies	22
A. J. Sawyer	20
Edwin Willitts	16
Albert Dickerman	16

The ballots were the same up to the fourteenth. The ballots then fluctuated somewhat, each candidate losing or gaining one or two votes occasionally, and finally the convention adjourned till Friday morning. The balloting then continued in substantially the same channel until the 83d ballot, when Dickerman was withdrawn and the vote stood:

Boies	30
Sawyer	20
Willitts	24

The 88th ballot stood:

Willitts	22
Sawyer	20

The convention then adjourned for dinner. Upon assembling after dinner the 89th ballot was opened. Hillsdale county swung its entire vote for Boies, which gave him just a majority. Washtenaw and Monroe then followed suit, and the nomination was made unanimous. This nomination will give entire satisfaction to the Republicans of this county and Hillsdale, and there is no reason why it should be opposed in any quarter of the district. Mr. Boies is a man of marked business ability and high personal character, and would undoubtedly make a creditable representative. Whether he will be elected depends very largely upon the character of the opposition nomination.

GREENBACK CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

The Nationals held a congressional convention for the second district at Adrian, Monday last. The following delegates were present from the different counties:

WASHTENAW.—N. B. Covert, J. Sprague, G. A. Peters, E. A. Nordman, N. A. Putnam, A. Warner, J. O'Hara, F. Pullman, J. M. Forsythe, — Flynn, Myron Webb, — Burch.

HILLSDALE.—Reuben Straight, J. B. Alward, Alanson Deiscal, H. N. Weaver, N. S. Sharp, P. N. Sheriff, B. A. Morrison, J. J. Dennis, Jno. White, F. N. Kirby, Z. W. Parker. O. F. Guy, A. J. Cornell, H. B. Wheeler, Wm. Potter, H. B. Mead.

LENAWEE.—R. B. French, H. S. Heath, Alexander Richards, J. W. Helme, E. L. Russell, Geo. K. Bowerman, David Chase, H. Daniels, J. M. Burns. R. L. Glenn, H. F. Baker, J. Cross, C. Crane. Benj. Laur, D. Bordine, Silas A. Lawton, Aaron Tuft, H. C. Hall, J. Allen, P. D. Baker, Wellington Marlatt, John Conlin.

MONROE.—L. H. Sweet, Jno. G. Miller, E. Cornell, Luther Dunn, J.O. Zabel. P. Redding, J. C. Drew.

Mr. A. J. Baker of Jonesville was nominated for congress on the second ballott. Mr. Baker was then called out and addressed the convention in a red-hot, no-surrender Greenback speech. The following congressional committee was appointed, after which the convention adjourned.

Washtenaw—J. Sprague, John Flinn. Hillsdale—H. D. Farnum, J. I. Dennis; Monroe—J. O. Zabel, Edward Chase; Lenawee—C. H. Dewey, Japeth Cross.

Adrian Times: The base ball grounds for the great game of next Monday between the Troys and Detroits have been laid out on Lawrence park. The judge's stand has been moved to the east, and the race track fence removed, so that the grand stand front will serve as a back stop for the catcher. This will give those in the grand stand the best possible view of the game.

THE COALITION MOVEMENT.

The Democratic and National State Conventions were held on Wednesday of last week the former at Jackson and the latter at Grand Rapids. Both conventions were largely attended, and both ratified a union ticket composed of four Nationals and five Democrats, as follows, the Nationals in italic.

Governor—Josiah W. Begole.
Lieutenant governor—Eugene Pringle.
Secretary of state—A. J. Shakespeare.
Commissioner of state land office—John F. Vandervanter.
Superintendent public instruction—David Parsons.
Member state board of education—Clark P. Hall.
State treasurer—Edward Kanter.
Auditor general—Gen. James Blair.
Attorney general—Timothy Tarsney.

The ticket is said to be a strong one. We give below the platforms adopted by the two parties.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The democrats of Michigan in convention assembled, recognizing the people as the source of political power, and the constitution as the fundamental law of the land, do solemnly declare.

1. That home rule is the essence of free government, that the line boundary between State and Nation is clearly defined and needs only to be strictly followed to conserve the broadest liberty to the people.

2. Earnestly believing that a real civil service reform is needed to purify every department of our federal government, we therefore demand, as an initial but important step in this direction, an amendment to the federal constitution which will give to the people of the several cities, villages, and such other postal districts as may be authorized by law, the right to elect postmasters.

We also demand that federal subordinate officers shall not be appointed or removed because of political belief, nor appointed until their ability and merit have been proven by open public examination and competition, and that political assessments on, or forced contribution upon public officers, should be made felony by law.

3. We are unalterably opposed to the unjust, unequal and iniquitous system of taxation called a protective tariff, which oppresses the farmer and laborer, destroys our merchant marine, breeds and enriches monopolies and impoverishes the poor. The traditional policy and principals of the democratic party are on the side of complete commercial freedom, and we demand immediate and aggressive revenue reform in the direction of free trade, subject to a tariff only sufficient to raise the necessary revenue for government expenditures, economically administered.

4. That the right of congress to make appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors should be restricted to such as are of national importance; that the people of Michigan cannot be bribed with a share of the theft to sanction the waste of thirty million dollars in two years, and we denounce, without distinction of party, all who voted in congress for the iniquitous river and harbor bill.

5. That the letting of the printing of the annual tax sales to party favorites, without competitive bidding, and the keeping in the state treasury of from one to two million dollars of state funds for the benefit of partizan office holders, while the people are heavily taxed, are demoralizing to the public service and demand immediate reform.

We cordially invite the voters of Michigan, without regard to previous party affiliations to join us in our earnest efforts to correct these abuses by withdrawing the administration of state affairs from those who have been already too long in power, and confiding it to those who come freshly from the people, untrammelled by the tyranny of political rings and party machinery.

THE GREENBACK PLATFORM.

The national greenback-labor party of Michigan reaffirms the leading principles of the party as set forth in the last national platform, which have been forcibly epitomized as follows: First, to destroy sectional strife; second, to pay promptly the public debt; third, to reduce taxes and expenditures; fourth, to establish unlimited coinage of gold and silver; fifth, to substitute government legal tender paper for bank issues; sixth, to overthrow corruption at the polls, and in representative bodies; seventh, to secure a free ballot and a fair count; eighth, to control by law and bring into subjection to the interests of the people all monopolies which have corrupted the public services, and by combination and extortion have established absolute dominion over money or invention, and over land and labor.

The right to petition to amend the constitution is a sovereign power of the people and we therefore favor the submission to the people of the question of constitutional prohibition of the liquor traffic for ratification or rejection.

We will support no candidate for any official position who will not pledge himself that if elected he will not accept from any corporation a free pass on any railroad or public conveyance or its equivalent while holding official position.

We denounce the republican party for having rechartered the national banks; for having attempted to relieve the banks of taxation rather than the producing classes, and for extravagant appropriations of nearly $80,000,000 in excess of former years.

The assessment of office-holders for a corrupt campaign fund is the crowning shame of a party owned by grasping monopolists and bossed by unscrupulous politicians, who seek power for the spoils afforded through excessive taxations of the people.

We favor the repeal of the special tax on railroads and other corporate property, and demand that they be subjected to a tax in the municipality where located, upon the same basis as other property is assessed.

We invite all good citizens to join us in carrying these principles to a successful issue at the ballot box.

THE RAILROAD BOOM.

Progress of the Canvass for the T. & M. Road During the Past Week.

The Toledo and Milwaukee is surely getting on its feet again. Last Thursday evening a meeting was held at the Council Building to present the case before the public, which was well attended. Mr. Lamb, attorney for the Toledo syndicate, was present. Wm. Hayden was called to the chair and Wm. DeMott was chosen Secretary of the meeting. Remarks were made by Mr. Hayden, Mr. Lamb, Mr. A. W. Mills and others, and a vote was passed without a dissenting voice that Tecumseh would renew her bonus notes. The old R. R. Committee was continued, with Wm. Hayden at the head, and it was instructed to proceed with a canvass forthwith to renew the notes. Many of the heaviest subscribers who were present at the meeting gave their pledges to renew on the spot. On Friday morning the canvassers went to work, and every day since has counted. On Saturday evening the committee had in hand $5,475 of new notes, and at the close of yesterday's work the aggregate amounted to $8,000.

Monday afternoon a meeting was held in Ridgeway village which was well attended, and which revealed an excellent sentiment among the residents of that village. The old committee was reappointed and instructed to push the work at once. The particulars of the meeting may be found in our Ridgeway correspondence.

The canvass has been opened auspiciously at Marshall as will appear from the following item taken from Saturday's Free Press:

MARSHALL, August 25.—A delegation of prominent citizens of Marshall on Wednesday held a conference with the Seney syndicate at Toledo in relation to the construction of the proposed line of railroad from Toledo to Grand Haven. On the return of the delegation from Toledo a public meeting was called and the propositions made by the syndicate were reported as follows: Seventy thousand dollars was pledged by citizens of Marshall towards this project some time ago, which subscriptions, according to agreement, will expire within the ensuing three months. This corporation gives assurance that providing the aforesaid subscribed amount be transferred and the time of payment thereof extended, say three or six months, the road will be completed and equipped through here early in 1883. At the meeting referred to, the request of the syndicate was complied with by a large proportion of the heaviest subscribers, while some doubled the amount already given.

A committee was appointed to secure the object by waiting upon the other subscribers and have their notes also changed. It is expected this work will be completed within the next few days and thus secure this important railroad connection. The citizens of Marshall have been anxiously seeking an opportunity of this kind for years, and now stand ready to assist to the extent of their ability. Formerly depot grounds and right of way through the city were secured, which franchises will now unquestionably be granted. The authorities of Toledo gave assurance that if their demands were complied with, operations on the line will commence immediately.

We heard from Addison last Tuesday and they are renewing their notes with a rush. There will be no trouble or delay so far as Addison is concerned.

On Tuesday evening a meeting was held at the cheese factory in Cambridge. There was a fair number out and the feeling manifested was first rate. Pledges were taken then and there for $2,500 renewals, and the old canvassing committee was instructed to go to work at once. Taken all together the canvass is progressing in a satisfactory manner all along the line.

Normal Class.

At the opening of the Tecumseh schools, Sept. 4th, 1882, a Normal class will be organized for the benefit of those preparing for the October examination of teachers. Special attention will be given to Organization and Government of Schools, Theory and Practice of Teaching, and a thorough review of the branches in which candidates for teacher's certificates are required to pass examination before the Board of Examiners. These branches will be reviewed so as to present the latest and best methods of teaching them.

Members of this class will also be allowed to visit the different departments of the school for the purpose of observing the methods of instruction there pursued.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

EIGHTEENTH WEEK.

His reasons are two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff; you shall seek all day ere you find them; and when you have them they are not worth the search. —SHAKESPEARE.

Again thou reignest in thy golden hall
Rejoicing in thy sway, fair queen of night,
The ruddy reapers hail thee with delight;
Theirs is the harvest, theirs the joyous call
For tasks well ended are the season's fall.
—ROSCOE.

"Now then," said Columbus, as he nailed a loose leg in the baby's chair and kicked the Captain off the kitchen table where he was inspecting the toast and coffee the girl had prepared for breakfast. "I suppose the wheat must be cut this week. It orter been done last week, but it wouldn't do to let the beans go without hein' hoed. If a little wheat does go back into the ground you're only losin' a dollar a bushel, but your bean crop will fetch twenty shillin a bushel at least, and that must be saved at all hazards. The fact is, young man, raisin' wheat don't pay in this latitude. It takes too much work to put it in and the crop is too oncertain. Wheat will do very well over in Egypt where the overflowin' of the Nile furnishes victuals and drink for the crop; or down in Texas where the nigger can be hired for ten cents a day; or up in Dakota where they sow wheat by the mile, and drill it, cut it, thresh it, and draw it to mill all by steam power. But where a man has to hire first-class help like me at big wages, raisin' wheat don't pay.

After the land is got ready and the seed put in, the crop has to run the gauntlet of the fly, the weavil, a hard winter, the rust, cockle and ragweed, the pinch bug, catapillars and grass hoppers and a dozen other kinds of vermin till harvest time. If it gets through all these unharmed, and ripens a good berry, then it costs more'n it comes to to cut it, draw it and thrash it. Yankee farmers have got so high-toned that every man thinks he must have a reapin' machine, and your Yankee tariff makes the machines cost double what they orter. No wonder so many farmers have their farms plastered with mortgages, for it takes a small fortune to buy a new-fangled machine. I see you 'hain't got no reapin' machine, but we can borrow one. Any man who will fool away his money for such nonsense can't object to lendin' it out to his neighbors. Over'n Canada we have a machine that cuts the heads off the wheat, thrashes it out and grinds it into flour all at once. Such a piece of farm machinery is worth somethin'. As your wheat is about one-third cockle, one-third pigeon weed, one-third timothy and clover, one-third June grass, and one-third rag weed, I think you'd better cut it with your own mowin' machine, bunch it up into hay-cocks and stack it with the horse hay-fork. Whether you'll get any wheat is a question, but the straw will make good sheep fodder and good beddin' for the horses.

You'll need about three extra hands besides Ellic to foller the machine, one boy to carry water, one boy to rake down the shooks, and one boy with a whetstone to sharpen the mower knives. With this gang o' hands, if we begin bright and early Monday mornin, we orter get your ten acres cut by Wednesday night. Vennor says a big storm is comin' on Thursday, so we must get the wheat in shipshape by Wednesday night sure pop."

Ichabod hooked up "old Sue" after dinner, went around the neighborhood and got the extra hands ready to begin work Monday morning.

Monday, Aug. 1st.—All hands went into the wheat at six o'clock a. m. Ichabod had provided ice water and bear's oil to grease the machine with, and every man had a cabbage leaf in the top of his hat and an onion in his pocket. The machine started in very nicely, but on the second round the mowing bar struck a cobble stone and snapped three knives off. New sections were put on and by ten o'clock the machine was "rattling o'er the stones" again. The wheat then shelled so badly that it was found necessary to lay off till evening. The afternoon was spent to good advantage in sharpening the teeth of the hand rakes and putting the gate on its hinges which led into the wheat field. At eight o'clock in the evening the machine started in and cut until twelve. Two acres were cut and put up in splendid condition.

Tuesday, Aug. 2d.—All hands turned out at five o'clock and cut wheat two hours before breakfast. After breakfast they started in again, but the wheat began to shell and active operations were postponed until sunset. The men passed the day—except during meal time—in pitching quoits and playing "seven up." One acre was cut in the morning and three hours' work by moonlight took down three acres more.

Wednesday, Aug. 3d.—Cut one acre of wheat in the morning before the shelling hour arrived. The customary intermission was then taken till sunset. After dinner it began to cloud up. Vennor's storm was coming. Ichabod advised me to borrow a lot of lanterns to light the field with in case it was cloudy. I found ten lanterns in the neighborhood, and rented twenty more at the hardware. I also found ten old torches in the garret left over from the last political campaign. I hired boys at ten cents each to hold the lanterns and torches. The night was darker than pitch, except in my wheat field. That was as light as noonday. Columbus finished the last round just as the paper-mill whistle blew its midnight blast.

Thursday, Aug. 4th.—Vennor lied. The storm didn't come to-day. Columbus was sick, having been overcome with the heat during the past three days. Ellic carried home the borrowed lanterns.

Friday, Aug. 5th.—Columbus went after another hired girl. The old girl would put butter in the fried potatoes and season the gravy with pepper, salt, vinegar and mustard. Ichabod swore that he wouldn't have such an extravagant girl in the house any longer.

Saturday, Aug. 6th.—Vennor's storm arrived this morning, and Columbus got in just at night with a hired girl. Ellic combed out the Captain's wool and split up some old shingles for kindling wood.

Hindu Music.

We were once misguided enough to inquire of some native officials what instruments of music their town possessed, and were waited upon next day, in consequence, by all the musicians in the place. First came a group of nine women, who sang some wild and plaintive strains in unison in a minor key; one of them kept time by occasionally snapping her fingers, while another performed a rude accompaniment on a small barrel-shaped drum, the ends of which were covered with goatskin. The head-dress of some of these singers was peculiar, and consisted of folds of calico over the head and round the throat, rather like the drapery of some order of nuns, and similar to that given by painters to St. Anna and other holy women of the bible. The grouping of these people, as they sat close together on the ground, was extremely picturesque; and, listening to the sad sweetness of their strains, one could easily imagine such to have been the appearance and the melody of the daughters of Jerusalem as they lamented by the waters of Babylon. The singing ended, a man was seen to rise in the background, lifting an enormous brazen trumpet nearly as long as himself, on which he blew two most terrific blasts, exercciating to English ears. These sounds were prolonged, and seemed to sink down through a long wailing discord inexpressibly painful to listen to, but not unfrequently to be heard in that district of the Punjab. The effort of blowing this trumpet is considerable, and we were glad to make this an excuse for hearing no more of it, and submitted with the best grace we could to a performance on the tom-tom, while two more men exercised their lungs upon horrid little trumpets of a smaller size. When these were dismissed, we had a kind of duet all on one note from two men, one of whom beat a small drum open at one end, like a very deep tambourine, while the other played upon something like a four-stringed banjo. The lower part of this instrument was made of a gourd, and two of the strings were passed through blue glass beads, while the other two were raised by cowries of different sizes. The banjo was further adorned by the green and gold label from some English cotton-reel or piece of calico, stuck on the stem by way of ornament.—Temple Bar.

Interesting Facts Concerning Water.

One gallon of distilled water weighs 10lb.

One gallon of sea-water weighs 10.32lb.

1.8 cubic feet of water weighs 1 cwt.

Sixty-six cubic feet weighs 1 ton, and equal 224 gallons.

One cubic foot contains 6¼ gallons.

In pipes the square of the diameter in inches equals pounds weight of water per yard. Example—A three inch pipe holds 9lbs. per yard.

1-100 inch of rain is about one ton weight to the acre.

A nominal horse-power for a boiler requires one cubic foot of water per hour.

Circular apertures are most effective for discharging water, since they have less frictional surface for the same area.

The ordinary speed to run a pump is eighty feet to 100 feet per minute.

The pressure in pounds per square of a column of water is the column in feet multiplied by .434, or for an approximation one-half pound pressure per inch for each foot of height.

Water, in flowing through an aperture, has a velocity equal to that acquired by a heavy body falling freely from a height equal to the distance between the centre of the aperture and the surface of the water.

Doubling the diameter of an aperture increases the flow fourfold.

A man can raise water from a well ten feet deep at the rate of thirty gallons per minute.

The approximate time occupied in discharging equal quantities of water under equal heads, through pipes of equal lengths varies from ninety for a straight line, 100 for a curve, to 140 for a right angle.—Mechanical World.

The Hon. Mr. Sullivan: "Well, I think it is a shame," said Mrs. Shuttle, as she threw down the newspaper. "Here is Mr. Sullivan, who wrote such beautiful 'Pinafore' music, fighting right in public, and he lost the fight, too." "Why, bless your heart, woman, said Job, "it isn't the same Sullivan at all." "Well, what Sullivan is it?" "It is Yankee Sullivan, a man who has been fighting these years and years." And with all this misinformation on hand, the conversation took a turn.

Patrick Dugan, of Harwinton, Conn., who killed his father, has been bound over in the sum of $400. The Judge had a great mind at one time to make it $450. Tell ye wat, naow, when a man daown in Connecticut goes'n kills his father, 'y gol, they make him smart fur it. 'Tain't like ez of 'twaz out West naow, wher they don't hev no regard for human life. Parson Goodbee says ef he'd a been on the bench he'd a made his bail $550, he wouldn't a cared wat folks said.—Burlington Hawkeye.

They tell of a dog down in Augusta, Me., who suffered from toothache until a dentist extracted a "whole row of decayed teeth," and it is said that "the poor dog held his mouth open and sat perfectly quiet while the teeth were being drawn." We have nothing to say against the dog for sitting perfectly quiet; but if the dentist during the operation poured into the dog's unwilling ears the tedious recital of previous exploits in dentistry, we shall never forgive him for not biting the hand off the tooth-puller. From what we know of dentists, we feel sure that the dog did not escape the customary infliction, and therefore we despise the dog.—Boston Transcript.

A patent has been granted to the celebrated German, Herr Krupp, for a new sort of floating battery. This is designed for coast defense. The new battery is circular in form, and is said to combine the greatest stability with the greatest amount of buoyancy. The buoyancy is produced by the use of air chambers. The battery is easily moved from place to place, and is steadied by ballast. It is not provided with either steam engine or sails, but it carries a very heavy gun. It is designed to be drawn by steam tugs.

Materials for Bedding.

Materials for bedding horses and cattle kept in stables are becoming scarce and high in many parts of the country, as they have been for a long time in most European countries. The value of straw is better appreciated than it formerly was, and more of it is used in the manufacture of paper. In some parts of Europe the straw employed for bedding horses is washed after it has been used for that purpose and is sold to paper manufacturers. Recently sawdust, sand, peat, and dried clay have been employed as substitutes for straw for bedding horses and dairy cows. Attention has also been called to the different kinds of mosses that grow in many parts of the country. That growing on trees in many parts of the south is found to be a very superior article, and seems to answer all the requirements. It is cheap, easily obtained, clean, and an excellent absorber of urine. When saturated with this substance and placed in heaps it rots readily and makes a good fertilizer. The moss found in bogs in all the northern states and which is used by nurserymen for packing trees and bushes is also found to make very good bedding after it is dried. All kinds of moss can be compressed into very small bulk by the baling process, and put in a form to be readily and cheaply transported. A Frenchman draws attention to the use of calcined earth as a litter. He covers some branches with clay, sets them on fire, and the earth is baked. It must then be kept under a shed to prevent absorption by humidity. In the calcined form, the absorbent power of clay is naturally augmented. In that state it is better fitted also to make gases. It is more suitable for a sheep than a cattle shed, and when employed in the latter case a slight sprinkling of straw will be an improvement. The best litter is that which will absorb most urine. According to Boussingault, bean, buckwheat, and pulse straws are first, as they absorb three times their weight of liquid; wheat straw, but twice its weight, and dried earth, but one-half.

His Love.

It was evening in the country. The moon-beams peeped softly between the leaves of the pulseless elm, and kissed the song-birds lost in happy dreams. The rose and the lily were asleep, so were the parsnip and the string-bean, and all the amorous air was toned with languid scent to the sublime altitude of a swell drug store.

They were walking up the shady avenue from the village whither he had taken her to prove his boundless admiration and love at a five-cent soda-water fountain.

"No," he commenced, for he knew they were getting near her vine-clad cottage, and he hadn't much time to lose, "my love for you shall never wane, wit, or grow less. With you I shall sail through life as tranquilly as over a placid moon-lit lake in a flat-bottomed boat, with a virtuoso at the stern playing the 'Old Folks at Home' on an accordion. You are my evening star this evening and every other evening, and you shall have a seal-skin sacque every Christmas."

She clutched his ready-made coat—or rather its sleeve—in a wild ecstasy of ineffable delight, while he continued: "You are the sweet particular idol of my life, and I shall take you to the circus next week. My love for you is deep as the iceman's cunning and the plumber's pocket, which, like a spring, refills itself when drained. Mine is a wild enthusiastic passion that will withstand the rigors of the arctic butcher and milliner. The strawberry vender may lose the cunning of the hand that arranges the meaner specimens below the large ones in the three-quarter-pint measure which he guarantees to hold a quart; but my love you will never lose, even if you bet it on a horse-race. Ah, yes, fair Imogen, while life lasts you shall have in me a defender against all the trials and tribulations of this vexed, uncertain life. My love for you burns like a dollar in a poet's pocket; it also burns like you snowy star, and not till that goes out—"

"It has just gone out," she broke in.

"Alas, too true!" he sighed. "I have been swearing by a Fourth-of-July balloon."

And he didn't say another word until he good-nighted at the gate.

Two Rolls of Bank Bills.

The story is told of a Hartford gentleman who lost one hundred dollars in bills, and, remembering that he had had the money last at a butcher's, went there to learn that just after he had left a man came to the shop to make some purchases. He felt in his pocket as if he had lost something. Then looking down he saw a roll of bills on the floor, picked it up and counted it. There was just one hundred dollars, and from it he paid for what he had bought. A week later the second person returned the one hundred dollars to the first, with the following strange explanation: On the day referred to he had been out to Windsor to collect some money, and in his haste to return to Hartford thrust it, one hundred dollars in bills, as he supposed, into his vest pocket. When he went into the market above referred to he naturally felt for his money, and, missing it, looked around for it and saw the roll on the floor, which he supposed was his own. He had used it during the week, and only on that day had he put on his working coat. While at work he wanted a match, and in feeling through the pockets of his coat, to his astonishment he found the one hundred dollars he had put there instead of into his vest pocket. As soon as possible he went to the market to see if any one had lost that sum of money, and this led to a general settling all round. He did not know at the time that he had been suspected of the theft, and did not imagine that he was in danger of arrest.

Quite Proper.

Young Dibbles was telling one of his circumposter stories at the breakfast table, when Bankson opposite, said, with an air of disgust, "O don't spread it on so thick." The land-lady, who was mentally figuring on her marketing, allowing forty-five cents for butter, suddenly looked up and exclaimed, "No, gentlemen; don't spread it on so thick, and it will last longer."—Norristown Herald.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

A Matrimonial Complication.

We learn of a curious matrimonial complication which occurred in Jones Co., Georgia, a short time ago. It seems that a certain young lady was ardently sought after by two young gentlemen. Each pressed his suit with so much zeal that the young lady could not decide between them. To gain time she engaged herself to both, duly appointing a time for marriage. One young gentleman at once went to the father to get his consent, and was made happy. The other no less promptly interviewed the mother, with entirely satisfactory results. Neither father nor mother mentioned the affair to each other. The young lady then wrote to No. 1 postponing the marriage. But the appointed time came on and No. 2 came with it, having made every preparation; but at the very last moment he was informed of the other engagement and retired. No. 1 hearing how No. 2 was treated, and fearing a like fate, withdrew from the race. Thereupon No. 2 renewed his suit, won the vacillating fair one, and everybody was made happy.—Macon Telegraph.

The Doctor's Last Happy Resort.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 11, 1882.

I recently had a very difficult case of Consumption. I treated it in the most scientific manner possible, but to no effect; patient grew gradually worse. Rather than give up, and as a last resort, I decided, much against my wish, to use a remedy that had cured one of my former patients.—Greatly to my surprise, the patient began to gain, and in a much shorter time than I dared to ever expect, she was completely cured. The name of this remarkable remedy is Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. I now use it altogether in my practice.—Leading M. D., Evansville.

Whisky still continues the only known antidote for a rattlesnake's bite; but it must be taken immediately, for the poison works with marvelous celerity. It saved the life of the Bowery museum proprietor, who was bitten in New York the other day. He sucked the wound and then drank freely of whisky. The latter, in conjunction with morphia, was used in the hypodermic treatment at the hospital afterward.

WHAT HAPPENED TO MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

Stone in the Kidney Expelled after Using Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" About two Weeks.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1871, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" —experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always afford me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. The "Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York.

The Man Who Taught Gen. Grant to Smoke.

On the piazza of the Manhattan Beach hotel, at Coney island, Friday evening, I came face to face with C. E. Lockridge, formerly a commission merchant in Second street, St. Louis, and now an important factor in the Iron Mountain railway. The recognition was mutual, and, after breaking a bottle of extra dry and lighting cigars, Uncle Cy said: "I never smoke nowadays without thinking that I've saved Gen. Grant's life probably a thousand times. Ulysses and I have been friends ever since the great 'Forties. Time and time again have we gone to Papstown—now East St. Louis—from our respective homes across the Mississippi and shot bullfrogs and swamp snipe. In those days I was an inveterate smoker, and Ulysses had never bitten the tip of a prime Havana. Well, one September afternoon we were over at Long lake fishing for bass. The mosquitos were thicker than flies in a lager beer saloon, and they concluded to eat Ulysses up. He slapped and banged and swore until the mud-turtles even refused to bite, and then I persuaded him to take a cigar. He protested that he knew nothing about smoking, but my eloquence on the theme of smoke as a mosquito-killer won the day, and the now great man then and there smoked his maiden cigar. He stood it like a soldier, did not feel sea-sick, and rated it a goodly portion of heavenly bliss."

"But how did you save Gen. Grant's life?" I impatiently asked.

"Why, I taught him how to smoke. He took to the weed as an American takes to blue-grass whisky, and in all times of danger has puffed away and kept his wits about him. Why, if I had not taught Gen. Grant how to smoke he would not have been in the smoking-car during the accident on the railroad a few days ago, and would surely have lost his life. Waiter, a match, please; my cigar has gone out."—New York Star.

J. Gordon Bennett's Newport Home.

A correspondent's letter says that James Gordon Bennett has no other home than Newport. His house is a massive stone structure, not built in the present somewhat showy style, but elegantly appointed and in perfect taste. Here no money is spared for real elegance and comfort. The house is worth about $100,000. In it he keeps a famous chef, and his friends offend him if they do not use house, chef and servants as freely as if it were a hotel. He keeps fourteen horses, and has every style of vehicle, from a coach to a village cart. He usually rides himself in the little unpainted village cart, and puts his stables at the disposal of his friends. Mr. Bennett is much liked here. He is more beloved than liked by a large number of people who are his beneficiaries. He does more good in a quiet way than any man I know of. This season he is off in his yacht to the Azores, but he leaves his house open, and he came on to set the ball to rolling.

We owe much to Mr. Bennett. We owe to him our Casino, the prettiest bit of architecture in America. This Casino is the focus for the summer life. Here every morning come all the fashionables to sit and chat, and listen to the music or play tennis. There is a beautiful theatre, where there are hops in the evening two or three times a week, often a grand ball, and several times during the season excellent chamber concerts, amateur theatricals, etc. Family tickets, entitling one to all the privileges, cost $25 for the season. One must be "introduced" in order to become a member.

An Uncommon Smart Rolling Mill Man.

When the Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. resumed work a stranger applied for employment. To the inquiry as to whether he was a mill hand he answered in the negative, saying he was a farmer. He seemed a smart fellow, however, and he was engaged as a laborer at a salary of $1.75 per day. He seemed to take hold of the work with a business-like air and soon distinguished himself from his fellow-workmen by the superiority of his work. One day some part of the machinery got out of gear and the stranger, unasked, jumped in and straightened matters in a jiffy. His pay was raised and on several other occasions he has exhibited his competency in mill matters so that at last he was given the place of Thomas Thompson, one of the striking foreman, with a salary of $15 per day. Some little time ago he was approached by the strikers who asked him what his business in the ward was.

"What do you want to know for?" asked the man, whittling at a piece of wood.

"Well, we want to know if you are working in the mills?"

"Yes, I am," he quietly replied "and I'm going to as long as I please. And right here let me tell you, gentlemen," he continued, "that you'd better leave me alone, for the first man who interferes with me will get a dose of cold lead."

The man can be seen any day after work hours lounging about. He is dressed in the latest style and sports a watch fob and patent leather boots. The strangest part of the proceeding is that no one seems to know his name nor anything about his previous history.—Cleveland Plaindealer.

Always in Order.

A bill to tax dogs was before the Maine Legislature. The member from Hemlock came suddenly to his feet and said excitedly:

"Mr. Speaker, that bill is oppressive. It taxes me and almost all of my constituents. It is a —"

"The gentleman is out of order. Debate is not in order in this the morning hour," interposed the Speaker, amid the laughter of the House.

"He has a right to proceed, Mr. Speaker, for a personal explanation is always in order," put in Representative Lew. Baker. But the Hemlock member subsided.

It was a youth of modest purse, said soft unto a maid; "Which would you rather tackle next, ice cream or lemonade?" Across the maiden's rosy cheek fast flits a winning smile; "I'll order some of both," she said. Lord help the young man's pile.

Sick Children.

It is better to take your child to the doctor unnecessarily than to postpone this duty and find that it is too late. A few hours in the diseases of children may make all the difference between hopeful and hopeless cases.

When you take counsel of a doctor give him your explicit confidence. Do not permit any friend—even though the friend be an experienced old mother and nurse—to disturb confidence in the doctor. Follow no advice that is against what he has said. If you lose confidence in him get another physician.

When a child is old enough to know what you mean, never threaten it with the doctor. It may be very important some day that your child should not be frightened at the doctor, but regard him as a friend and helper.

A sick child demands a nursing mother, who has tact, patience, firmness, added to her affection. With these so much can be done; without them the battle may be hopeless from the first.

It is asserted that every year 3,000 children die in New York who need not die if proper care were taken of them. High heated terms have much to do with these deaths. Every hour that a young child is exposed to a temperature above 85 or 88 degrees, in a crowded neighborhood, it is robbed of vitality. High heat acts injuriously on its blood, nerve and muscle-cells, and also on the digestive system of the child and the milk of a nursing mother. High heat does more—it decomposes all organic refuse and dirt in houses and about them, and poisonous air, water, food, clothing, bedding, carpets, etc. Hence the need of excursions for children and of cleanliness at home.

Do not lift or drag a child by its arm or arms. You strain ligaments which were not intended to bear the weight of the body. A grown person swinging from a bar with his hands relieves the ligaments by the use of muscles.

Using Clover for Manure.

The cheapest way to keep up the fertility of most soils consists in raising red clover and turning it under while it is green. The growth of the plants may be greatly increased by the application of ground plaster or gypsum which costs very little and is easily applied. The old practice of plowing under the entire stalks of clover when at their full size the year after the seed is sown is now generally abandoned. The trouble of turning them under is great, the time for doing the work conflicts with pressing farm operations, and the rotting of the plants is generally quite unsatisfactory. At present the practice of allowing the clover to grow till two crops are harvested is generally followed. At the end of two years the soil contains a large number of roots which are very long. They furnish a large amount of fertilizing material which readily rots in the ground. When corn is to be raised on an inverted clover sod the land is plowed quite deep just before the planting is done. At that time the plants will be quite large, but not so tall that they can not be easily covered by the plow. When fall grain is to be sown on the land it is plowed after the clover crop is harvested. Observation shows that the soil is in poor condition to plow when there is a rank growth of clover on it. The numerous leaves of the clover plant aid in evaporation and cause the soil to become very dry under it. After the crop is cut and removed the soil will become more moist and in a better condition to be plowed. The value of red clover as manure is being better appreciated every year, and the recent expansion of the winter wheat crops is largely owing to the general introduction of clover.

Irrigation on a Small Scale.

On farms where there is an artesian well, a pump operated by wind power, or a spring whose outlet is tolerably elevated it will be found quite easy to irrigate a piece of land of the extent of an acre or more. During seasons of severe and protracted drought this irrigated land will be found of great value. It can be made to produce large crops of garden vegetables, which will be fresh and delicious when those that are not supplied with water will be stringy and shriveled. Celery plants are generally placed in rows at about the time the dry, hot weather commences, and very many of them fail to grow. By having means to irrigate the land celery may be made a sure crop and a very superior article produced. Land that is irrigated will also produce excellent cabbage and cauliflower. For producing late cucumbers for pickling there is nothing like irrigated land. Radishes as crisp and delicious as those produced early in the season can be raised on irrigated land during August and September.

To grow strawberries in perfection it is necessary to have the soil where the vine are planted well supplied with water whether there is rain or not. If strawberry vines are supplied with water every two or three days, they will grow very fast and be very productive. By allowing them to rest a few days after they have produced the first crop and then supplying them with moisture at stated intervals, they will generally blossom again and produce a second crop of fruit. An acre of irrigated land will keep a family well supplied with fine fruits and vegetables during the usual season of drought and afford many articles that can be sold in the market to excellent advantage. On many farms an amount of water runs to waste that could be made to irrigate an acre or more of land.

A Yates county man (New York) put $400 in a straw bed safe keeping. When house-cleaning time came, his wife emptied and burned the mattress, together with the money.

Her Own Experience.

"The friend of ours who recommended your 'Favorite Remedy' had herself suffered from a stroke of paralysis, which rendered her entire right side powerless, and, in a word, left her as helpless as an infant. But 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' cured her and she is now able to do her own work." The above is quoted from a letter from a gentleman in Elmira, N. Y., to Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y. You need a bottle in the house.

He Noticed.

"That man over there," said Sligo to his friend Slick, pointing to a bloated boudholder, "is so proud that he will take no notice of anything beneath him."

"He won't eh?" replied the friend. "I'll bet you $5 that I'll make him."

The wager was taken, and the young man followed the purse-proud aristocrat into a restaurant. Just as he was about to sit down Slick stuck a heaven-ward-pointing tack on the chair. Before the commotion had ceased he returned to his friend and claimed the wager.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

The Height of Folly.

To wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, is the height of folly, when you might be easily cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known sickly families made the healthiest, by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

The stage of a Western theatre took fire the other evening, but a panic and rush for the door was averted by the manager, who, with great presence of mind, slipped to the front and said, "Ladies and gentlemen, we have prepared a little surprise for you. An immense kettle of whiskey-punch is now being heated, and in a few moments waiters will pass through the hall and distribute it." After that the audience had to be pulled out one by one.

The reception given by Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Wilson last Thursday evening was attended by about sixty, mostly by young people, and was a grand affair. Gene and wife have the best wishes of all.

The railroad meeting held at Britton Saturday evening was well attended, the school house being well filled. The remarks of S. C. Stacy fully convinced those present that a new railroad was a thing as much needed as the first, and it being within reach, resolved to appoint a committee to work the matter up. The committee consisted of John Cheever, George Exelby, Chas. Dubois and G. W. Smith.

A Voice From the Press.

I take this opportunity to bear testimony to the efficacy of your "Hop Bitters." Expecting to find them nauseous and bitter and composed of bad whisky, we were greatly surprised at their mild taste, just like a cup of tea. A Mrs. Cresswell and a Mrs. Connor, friends, have likewise tried, and pronounce them the best medicine they have ever taken for building up strength and toning up the system. I was troubled with costiveness, headache and want of appetite. My ailments are now all gone. I have a yearly contract with a doctor to look after the health of myself and family, but I need him not now. S. Gilliland, People's Advocate, Pittsburg, Pa., July 25, 1878.

Hon. George W. Moore, of Medina, then read an interesting history of that township. At its close a vote of thanks was extended to him and he was requested to furnish a copy for publication. It will be printed in due time.

Mr. Dewey read a paper on the Indians of this county as they lived and moved thirty years ago, giving a detailed description of the Indian Chief Baw Beese as he lived at that time.

A motion was made to change the by-laws so as to allow the annual meetings to be held in different parts of this county. After considerable discussion a motion was carried to leave the place of holding all future meetings to the President and Executive Committee.

Volunteer speeches were then called for and Col. Eldridge, Mrs. Charles Luce, Mrs. Frary, Samuel Moore and others responded in a few interesting remarks.

A call was made for all who were citizens of the county when Michigan was a territory to stand up. Forty-one responded. Those who were in the State before its admission numbered seventy-five. Ten were present who were residents of the county in 1828, viz:

W. H. Montgomery—Hudson.

Special Telegram.

Great Valley, N. Y.—Having sold your medicines for the past two and a half years can cheerfully recommend all of them, especially Baxter's Mandrake Bitters, as I have sold several gross of them, and in every instance wherever I have recommended any one to try a bottle they have come back after more. I have used all your medicines in my family and find them all excellent family remedies. Yours truly, J. E. Chase, Druggist. Price 25 cts. per bottle.

Women Who Suffer Those Terrible Headaches.

I used "Favorite Remedy" for those severe sick-headaches I spoke about, and it has entirely cured me. You may use my name, if you choose, among those who so freely testify to the value of your medicine. I owe the restoration of my wonted good health to "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Sarah J. Woodruff, Newburgh, N. Y. The above is one of my letters of the kind received by Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y.

Outside The World.

Outside the Bar, amid the breaking surges,
By mighty winds capriciously misled;
Toy of the tempest god who madly urges
The ship toward yon reef that lies ahead;
Beset by night, whose darkling clouds are driven
Across a sky that shows no friendly star;
With rudder broken, and with canvas riven,
How will she reach her goal within the Bar?

Outside the Bar, like some great soul in sorrow,
The laboring bark bemoans the bitter hour;
And her brave crew, with longings for the morrow,
Toil through the night against the tempest's power.
Ah! can she conquer when each giant billow
Has roused itself man's handiwork to mar?
Their angry crests afford no restful pillow
To one who longs for peace within the Bar.

Outside the Bar the storm-fiends, wildly mocking
At human weakness, rave in accents rude;
While in their ruthless grasp the ship is rocking,
A prey to every demon's changeful mood.
The way to port is through these breakers standing
Like foeman-sentinels in time of war;
Their iron-clad and hostile forms commanding
The haven of her hopes within the Bar.

Outside the Bar the ocean voices thunder,
And night bends over all her deathly frown;
Within the Bar some tender hearts do wonder
If ships will find their refuge near the town.
Now, for the sake of those our spirits cherish,
Who toss upon tempestuous seas afar,
Pray that the bark beleaguered may not perish,
But anchor safely yet within the Bar.

TOBEY'S FORTUNE.

In 1862, Tobey was a small black boy living in Holly Springs, which was then a Southern town unluckily placed in the [illegible] ord soon became of the most exciting nature. But none had an experience to be mentioned in the same breath with Tobey, who had a fortune in his grasp and never knew it! It is too outrageous for belief, but it is literally true, and this is how it happened:

It was the twentieth of December—"the glorious, glorious twentieth," the people of Holly Springs call to this day. Tobey, whose other name was Kinkle, was awakened early in the morning by the sound of firing.

"Git up, pappy!" he called excitedly, "don't you hear de shootin'?"

Uncle Jim Kinkle, who was snoring comfortably in one corner of the cabin, under a great pile of dingy quilts and spreads, was slow in coming to the surface.

"What's the matter, Tobe?" he growled in sleepy tones.

"Fightin's de matter," shouted Tobey, hopping up and down. "Don't you hear the guns? Come out to de mound, an' wake up mammy, so she kin come, too."

He was off with these last words, and Uncle Jim, now fairly aroused, jumped up and jumped into his clothes in about the length of time it was said to take the wife of "Billy boy" to make a cherry pie.

Then he dashed out, head in front, as a bull charges. He was soon with Tobey on the top of an old mound, from which there was a good view.

"Great gran'daddy!" cried Uncle Jim, as he looked. "Jerusalem orickets! Pharioh an' all his hosts!"

A vigorous fight was going on; the sharp crack of rifles and occasional yells were borne distinctly to their ears. Suddenly a ringing cheer burst from a thousand throats; a mounted squad tore like a whirlwind across the field, with another in hot pursuit.

"Which is runnin'? Tobey," cried Uncle Jim. "My eyes is gettin ole. I can't tell tudder from which."

"Hooray fur de Ragged Rebs!" shrieked his offspring. "De Yank is gittin over de groun' like skeered rabbits. Whoopee! ain't dis a sight?"

By this time Aunt Betsey had waddled to the mound.

"Is de worl' comin' to an end?" she asked, puffing between her words like an engine.

"No mammy," said Tobey, "de worl' ain't comin' to an end; but de Feds is whipped out, sho's you bawn."

"Look at yo' daddy, Tobe," said Aunt Betsey; "what in de lan' is he doin'?"

Sure enough, what was he doing? He had stepped behind a magnolia tree growing on top of the mound and had turned his trousers wrong side out. Seeing this a ray of comprehension lighted Aunt Betsey's face.

"Go long wid you, nigger! Nobody's gwine ter notice an ole ijiot like you," she said with such a laugh as made her shake like a bowl of calf-foot jelly.

It must be explained that some days back one of the soldiers had given Uncle Jim a pair of blue breeches, and he had worn them proudly. But, like the Vicar of Bray, Mr. Kinkle had no particular principles, and meant to keep on good terms with both sides. To-day the boys in gray had the victory, and should he stand confessed a partisan of the Union, betrayed by his breeches? Perish the thought! He could not change them, however, for in Aunt Betsey's creed no man needed more than one pair at a time, and no sooner had her husband donned the blues than she cut down his old ones and put them on the growing Tobey. Uncle Jim, however, was a man for emergencies. A born turncoat, he readily understood how to turn trousers as well, and when he stepped from behind the tree it was with snowy legs and a face beaming with rebel enthusiasm.

"I'm gwine to town," he remarked.

"Don't you go roun' whar de fightin' is," said Aunt Betsey. "You'll git killed fust thing you know."

"I reckon de fightin' is about over, 'ooman. We have whipped out the intruders on our sile befo' sun-up," said Uncle Jim with dignity.

"Well, you'll want some breakfas' befo' you git off."

"No," smiling mysteriously. "I spec' I kin git better in town dan what you could give me."

"Kin I go wid you, pappy?" asked Tobe.

"Yes, chile, I reckon you won't never learn no younger."

Aunt Betsy, as is the lot of women, had to stay at home. She fried some bacon and roasted an ash-cake, and ate her breakfast placidly. Then she beat up her feather bed and milked the cow and tied the calf; after which she waddled again to the mound. Seeing nothing, she leaned her broad back against the magnolia tree, shut her eyes, and placidly went to sleep.

Suddenly she waked with a start. The atmosphere was heavy. In the distance flames were mounting to the sky. Then a terrible explosion that seemed to make the very earth quiver threw her to the ground. Others followed; the glass in her cabin windows broke into bits; a smell of sulphur tainted the air.

Now, Aunt Betsey knew the world was coming to an end! Falling on her knees, she prayed fervently that Tobey and Jim and herself, and "ole Mars' an' ole Mis' an' de chillen an' Mars' Abram Lincoln an' Jeff Davis an' all good Christians and miserable sinners might be brought inter de fold." And she was still pouring forth this all-embracing prayer, when night came bringing son and husband home.

Their day had been very eventful. They had found the town in an uproar. A certain wild young cavalry officer, with a name like that of a novel hero—Earle Van Dorn—had galloped into Holly Springs with his reckless brigade, before the soldiers in camp were awake, to their utter confusion and overthrow. Not much blood had been shed, but all the Federals were captured, disarmed and released on parole. Holly Springs—the pretty little wicked rebel town—was out of its wits with joy. Already in fancy the sanguine Southerners saw Grant bound hand and foot, and the Confederacy a queen among nations. Handkerchiefs and tiny flags—starred and barred—waved from every window. Houses were thrown open to chance guests in gray, and as few had time to enter, the gateways were crowded with children. Matrons and maids, laughing, weeping, shaking hands, asking a thousand questions, stopped only to regale their friends with the delicacies most enjoyed by these sons of chivalry—buttermilk and onions.

Toward the middle of the day the foundry buildings and the old schoolhouse were fired. These held army stores that could not be taken away—delicate eatables for the hospital, boxes of medicine, barrels of flour, coffee, sugar, tea, whisky, brandy and wine; so it was determined to destroy them, rather than leave them for the benefit of the enemy.

The people of Holly Springs had known by this time what is was to suffer actual want, and they could but feel a pang on seeing the fire lick up what would have been life-blood to so many. The black population found it too much to endure, and for once, taking the initiative, they set an example, followed by all who had strength for the venture; and so they hurried from all parts of the town with wheelbarrows, bags and baskets, and rushed, as it seemed, into the very heart of the flames. They would come back laden with whatever came nearest to hand, and perhaps some angel of the Odd watched over them, for not a life was lost during their perilous work.

Tobey and his father had their share in all the excitement. Uncle Jim skipped around in his white trousers like a patriot on an electric machine, and shouted, "Hooray for Van Dorn!" louder than anybody; and when the robbing or saving of the foundry stores began he was in his element. He went halves with a man in town who owned a go-cart, and together they worked like Trojans.

Tobey soon escaped from his father's eye, spurred on by his own ambition. He knew that firearms were stored somewhere in the building, and he determined to fit himself out in a way to strike terror to the heart of every other boy in the village. He ran up stairs, through the smoke curled about him little daggers of flame were striking with wavering menace at the steps. Running through a passage he tried to dash into a room where he fancied he should find what he sought, but the door was locked. Daunted for an instant, he looked about him wondering what to do. At this instant the thunderous explosion of the powder shook the building with frightful violence. Tobey fell, stunned, deafened and frightened half to death. When he picked himself up he saw that a window leading into the locked room was shattered into fragments, and, with a spirit worthy of blue blood, he jumped through.

It was the paymaster's room. Some one had evidently left in a hurry, some one who had tried to save the money just received for pay-day, as the chests were open and their contents partly gone; some one who had remembered to lock the door as he fled.

Tobey was greatly disappointed. What a stupid thing to find nothing but boxes filled with green pictures, and not a sign anywhere of pistol or bayonet. The little boy had never handled any money, never seen any, I might almost say. The crisp, new bills looked pretty, and with a sudden remembrance of his mammy's fondness for pasting pictures on the cabin walls, Tobey thrust a handful into each pocket and stuffed out the bosom of his flannel shirt with as many as it would hold. When positively driven out by the heat, he bounded down the stairs, the last living being to leave the doomed structure, and worth much more than when he entered it.

As night fell, Van Dorn galloped out of Holly Springs as hurriedly as he had entered. The town grew quiet, the people dispersed to their homes. Aunt Betsey at her prayers, as I have said, was surprised by the return of the wanderers, both in a state of radiant joy. Aunt Betsey heard their account of the day with many comments of wonder; but when a full coffee sack was thrown down beside her she merely folded her hands and said, "Bress de Lord!" And who wouldn't have said the same thing who for two years had been drinking coffee made of goober peas and sweet potatoes!

They feasted royally that night, and when supper was over Jim climbed the magnolia tree and tied the sack of coffee securely to its branches; the bag of flour he hid under the house, and into every rabbit hole in the mound he packed a can of fruit.

"What is you up to now, Jim?" said Aunt Betsey.

"Never you mind, old 'ooman, tain't no fool head on dis nigger's shoulders."

In fact, Mr. Kinkle's wits seemed preternaturally sharpened; and the event proved his wisdom. The next day Grant's army came pouring into Molly Springs, and men were detailed to search every house in town for stores that might have been saved.

They called on the Kinkle family. Jim met them at the door, a clay pipe in his mouth, his trowers blue, his sentiments loyal.

"Me got anything, gen'lemen?" he said, in a tone of great surprise. "Why, lor! I was sick in bed with the rheumatiz all day, an' wouldn't a-been able ter hav' acted like dem harem-scarem niggers in town ef I had a-wanted to. Tobey here, he went in, an' somebody gin him an ole powder flask, an' a can o' pineapple. We done eat de pineapple las' night; but I know Mr. Lincoln wouldn't begrudge dat much ter a good Union nigger like me."

This eloquence was not convincing, and the soldiers made a pretty good search. But they did not think of looking under the house, nor up the trees, nor in the rabbit holes. So Jim saved his prizes, and held his head very high all the rest of his life in consequence.

Tobey said nothing about the pretty green pictures; he kept them for a rainy day as it were, when Aunt Betsey should be cross. His night-dress was exactly the same as his day dress; so the bills rested safely where he had placed them, and nobody suspected what a walking bonanza he had become.

Van Dorn's raid was on Saturday. On the Monday following, Tobey was hanging about the smoking pile, that had been the foundry building, when two officers rode up and looked sadly on the ruins.

"There's no use lamenting," said one of them at last; "let us light our cigars and go."

The other felt in his pocket mechanically. "I have no matches," he said; "have you?"

"No, but we can light them from the fire—so much good it can do us, at least! Here boy! fetch me a coal."

Tobey neared the smoking heap cautiously. It did not seem possible to get a coal, but he could get the gentlemen a light by twisting up one of his green pictures for a spill. He had strong hopes of receiving a dime in return.

He took out one of the bills, twisted a long lighter and stuck it in the fire. It blazed quickly, and he ran with it to the officer, who took it, lighted his cigar, blew it out suddenly, and cried: "What the dickens is this?"

"Look, Foster," as he spread out the remnant, "a greenback bill as I'm a captain! Here, you little scamp! how did you come by this? Have you any more?"

"Oh! yes!" said Tobey in all simplicity. Then he told the story of how he came by them, the officers listening like statues of attention. When he had finished they turned and stared at each other, pulling their moustaches very hard. Then the captain said mildly, "Come to the camp with me and I'll give you some better pictures. These are all alike. You may just hand them over to me."

Tobey relinquished the bills, not so crisp and fresh as they were, but worth quite as much, while his captors grew almost speechless with astonishment as they saw the value the notes represented. They were careful not to enlighten Tobey, however, as to the value of his treasure trove, and he was sent off completely happy with a silver dollar and a pile of illustrated newspapers. Uncle Sam got his own again, for the officers were honest and loyal gentlemen. As for Tobey—he never knew that for two whole days he had been rich enough to buy out Holly Springs, or to found an orphan asylum, or to run race horses, or to own a yacht, or to start a daily paper. Aunt Betsey never knew—Jim Kinkle never knew, or, I fear, like certain old heroes in Roman history, they would have died of mortification. Tobey to-day thrives in the ignoble state of a barber, supporting his mother, who has grown too fat even to waddle, and his father, who is almost too lazy to breathe.—Sherwood Bonner, in Our Continent.

Wesley's Tact.

Although Wesley, like the Apostles, found that his preaching did not greatly affect the mighty or the noble, still he numbered some families of good position among his followers. It was at the house of one of these that the incident here recorded took place. Wesley had been preaching, and a daughter of a neighboring gentleman, a girl remarkable for her beauty, had been profoundly impressed by his exhortations. After the sermon Wesley was invited to this gentleman's house to luncheon, and with himself one of his preachers was entertained. This preacher, like many of the class at that time, was a man of plain manners, and not conscious of the restraints of good society. The fair young Methodist sat beside him at the table, and he noticed that she wore a number of rings. During a pause in the meal the preacher took hold of the young lady's hand, and raising it in the air, called Wesley's attention to the sparkling jewels. "What do you think of this, sir," he said, "for a Methodist's hand?"

The girl turned crimson. For Wesley, with his known and expressed aversion to finery, the question was a peculiarly awkward one. But the aged evangelist showed a tact which Chesterfield might have envied. He looked up with a quiet, benevolent smile, and simply said, "The hand is very beautiful."

The blushing beauty had expected something far different from a reproof wrapped up with such felicity in a compliment. She had the good sense to say nothing; but when, a few hours later, she again appeared in Wesley's presence, the beautiful hand was stripped of all ornaments except those which nature had given.

Birds That Observed the Sabbath.

A correspondent of the Selma (Ala.) Times has come to the conclusion that one pair of birds at least observed the Sabbath day and kept it holy. He says:

"A pair of mocking birds were very busy building a nest on the swinging bough of an oak tree that grows very near my room window. At dusk Saturday the nest was about finished. Yesterday (Sunday) I sat by the window reading most of the day, and could plainly see the nest and its builders.—During the whole day not one stroke of work did they do on it. They hopped and flew about, chirped and sang, but no work for them. They were keeping the Sabbath. This morning (Monday) bright and early, I looked out and then they were flying to and fro, carrying straws, sticks, and bits of cotton, as busy as bees. Strange, wasn't it?"

STORIES OF THE WAR.

A shell burst near an Irishman in the trenches. Gazing on the fragments, he exclaimed: "Be jabers! there's the foilers to tickle yer ear."

ANECDOTE OF STONEWALL JACKSON.

At a council of officers, early in the war, it was remarked that Major —— was wounded and would be unable to do the duty assigned him. "Wounded," said Jackson, "If it really is so, I think it must have been by an accidental discharge of duty."

THE HERO OF THE FAMILY.

A soldier had lost his arm, and was rejoicing over it. "My grandfather," said he, "lost a leg in the revolutionary war, and our family have been bragging over it ever since. The story is an old one, and now I am going to be the hero of the family."

HOW HE PRAYED.

When a Union gunboat was going into action one of the men who was on his knees was sneeringly asked by an officer if he was afraid.

"No, I was praying," was the response.

"Well, what are you praying for?"

"Praying," said the sailor, "that the enemy's bullets may be distributed the same way as the prize money is, principally among the officers."

AN IRISHMAN'S REBUKE.

An Irishman from Battle Creek, Mich., was at Bull Run battle, and was somewhat startled when the head of his companion on the left hand was knocked off by a cannon-ball. A few moments after a spent ball broke the fingers of his comrade on the other side. The latter threw down his gun and yelled with pain, when the Irishman rushed to him, exclaiming: "Blasht your soul, you ould woman, shtop cryin'; you make more noise about it than the man that losht his head."

WHY THE KETTLE WENT.

The committee appointed to collect metal for cannon for Gen. Beauregard's army, applied to a planter of Adams Co., Miss., for his bell. Not having such an article, he mentioned it to his wife, when she very patriotically offered her brass kettle. The little ones rather demurred to the sacrifice, and one of them, with a sweet tooth, said, "La, pa, what will we do for preserves?" "My daughter," said the wag of a father, "our whole duty now is to preserve our country." The kettle was sent.

WHY THEY CLOSED UP.

Among the troops in Western Virginia, stories about the Philippi affair formed a staple of conversation. Here is one of the best:

A certain Indiana company, almost worn out with marching, was straggling along with very little regard to order. Hurrying up his men, the Captain shouted, "Close up, boys! D—n you, close up! If the enemy were to fire on you when you're straggling along that way, they couldn't hit a d—n one of you! Close up!" And they closed up immediately.

SALLIE DUSKY' CHOICE.

When Gen. Kelly was in quest of guerrillas in West Virginia he captured a young woman named Sallie Dusky, whose two brothers were captains in the Confederate army. He questioned her closely, but could get no information regarding the guerrillas, and at last assured her that if she would impart the information he desired he would give her the chances for a husband of all the young officers of his staff. She declined, and was taken away by a Capt. Baggs. As she moved away from the General's presence she asked the Captain if the General was really in earnest in making the last proposition. Baggs assured her that he was sincere and would have lived up to his promise. The girl assumed a kind of thoughtful manner, and after a short time replied: "Well, I believe I'd about as lief have the old man (meaning the General) as any of 'em."

INCIDENT OF THE PENINSULA.

At the battle of Hanover Court House, Va., two sergeants met in the woods; each drew his knife, and the two bodies were found together, each with a knife buried in to the hilt.

A CHICKEN STORY.

A certain regiment was stationed not far from Meridian Hill. Capt. Nat. Percival had command of one of the companies—the crack company by general consent. One day a gentleman, resident near the camp, came in with a complaint setting forth that certain soldiers had maliciously, wickedly and most unwarrantably taken divers fowls from his hen-roost. He did not expect restitution, but he hoped that the culprits might be discovered and properly punished, and a stop put to the nefarious work.

From certain descriptions which the gentleman gave, the Colonel suspected that the crack company of the regiment must contain the pilferers; so he straightway summoned Capt. Nat. to his headquarters. The Captain came, and in his presence the gentleman repeated his charge.

"What did you say the soldiers took from your roost?" asked Capt. Nat.

The gentleman counted on his fingers—one fine rooster, four laying hens and three fine pullets.

"Rather a small collection of fowls, I should say, for such a place," said Capt. Nat.

"Oh, those were not all I had."

"What? Had you more—more fowls, at that time, on your roost?"

"O, yes—a great many more."

Whereupon Capt. Nat turned to his superior, and with a low bow, and with his hand laid upon his heart, he promptly declared:

"Colonel—you know, sir, that my men could not have been the marauders upon that occasion. They would not have left a tail feather behind!"

GOOD ENOUGH TO RETREAT WITH.

"Just look at them d——d 'yallerhammers' marching along with their old flint-lock rifles and squirrel guns," remarked a Kentucky "reb.," as the Forty-ninth Alabama Regiment, C. S. A., sauntered leisurely through the streets of Nashville.

"You go to h——!" retorted one of the Forty-niners. "I reckon these guns are jist as good to retreat with as any other; hain't they mister?"

The canine population of Brooklyn, according to the latest census, is 10,500. Not more than half of them are licensed.

Truth About Skobeleff.

He is Killed in a Drunken Brawl.

A Moscow dispatch to the London Telegraph says the details officially published concerning the manner and place of his disease are said to be absolutely false.

The facts are as follows. The evening before the General's death he was in his usual health and spirits, and dined heartily with some boon companions at one of the best restaurants in the town. After dinner the party proceeded to the Ermitage Gardens, a place of entertainment in the environs of Moscow, of the same character as the Cremorne Gardens used to be in London. More friends were met at the Ermitage, and after a lively evening the party returned to the town, Skobeleff inviting some of the company to join him at supper at a small hotel of indifferent repute, in the Petrovka street named Hotel d' Angleterre. In this hotel and in this society the General died.

Skobeleff had numerous enemies, and by many it is believed that he was a victim of foul play, but those who knew his character, and who also know who were in his company at the time of his death, consider it far more probable that he was killed by one of his male companions in a drunken brawl. I, myself, immediately on hearing of his disease, sought information at the Hotel d'Angleterre. I was refused admittance, and when I attempted to question the proprietor he declined to reply. [illegible] he did not know he was dead, and he did not know why I asked him about it. Other inquirers were in my presence similarly refused information. The General's body was at night secretly removed to the Hotel Dusaux, where the next day it was given out that Russia's greatest military chief had suddenly expired from heart disease.

The Hair Fair of Morlans.

The August number of a German magazine contains an account, apparently from an eye-witness, of one of the most unique markets of Europe—the human hair market at Morlans. Morlans is a small town in the old Land of Bearn, now a portion of the modern department of the Lower Pyrenees. It is unknown to the rest of the world, save, perhaps, to Paris, where it has a reputation as the seat of the great market of human hair. This market is held every other Friday. Hundreds of trafficking hair-dressers then throng to the little place from far and near in order to buy the hair from the young peasant girls fresh from the head. The dealers wander up and down the long, narrow, high street of Morlans, each with a huge pair of bright shears hanging from a black leather strap around his waist, while the young girls who wish to part with their hair stand about in their doorways, usually in couples. The dealing is carried on in the best room of the house. The hair is let down, the tresses combed out, and the dealer names his price. This varies from 3 to 20 francs. If a bargain is struck, the dealer lays the money in the open palm of the seller, applies his shears, and in a minute the long tresses fall on the floor. The purchaser rolls up the tresses, places them in paper, and thrusts them into his pocket. The writer says that it is very rarely that a maiden can contemplate her fallen tresses disappear into the dealer's pocket without a gush of tears. But she consoles herself by exclaiming: "Well, it will grow again," and by looking at the money in her hand.—London Globe.

A Street Romance.

A very interesting little story, says London Society, belongs to the exhibition of the Royal Academy this year. A lady and her daughter, in a sudden shower of rain, took refuge in a doorway. It was that of a great artist's studio; and the great artist himself entering at the moment, invited them to come in from the rain. As the rain steadily poured down he studied attentively the young girl's face and figure, and presently producing his card, he asked the mother's permission to make a painting of her daughter. So flattering a compliment from so distinguished an artist could not be declined, and a beautiful portrait, the result of a great many sittings, was finished in due time, and is one of the ornaments of this year's exhibition. Such a painting would have an immense value; but it was gracefully presented by the artist to the young lady herself. Its only fault is, that it hardly does justice to the lovely original.

Dore's Struggles.

The celebrated French artist Gustave Dore had a hard struggle to gain reputation and its result—bread. A writer in an English magazine describes how Dore "awoke one morning and found himself famous:"

I remember one night after the soiree we strolled along the boulevard and walked and dawdled as you can only on those long, straight, wide boulevards, and he told me the history of his life.

He had been obliged to borrow money to be able to get his illustrated "Dante" in print, and when he had spent fifteen thousand francs, for which he had engaged himself for thirty thousand, he had to borrow again at one hundred and fifty per cent. to finish the edition.

At last, when he took the work to Halchette's, that great publisher told him, "My dear sir, for twenty-four years have I been a publisher, and I have never made a mistake—this is a failure, thrown-away money. I would not take it at ten francs apiece."

Dore said,—

"After so much sacrifice and patient suffering, convinced that I must succeed, to hear an experienced man like Halhette say this was frightful. Anyhow, being set-up and engraved, I got ten copies bound and asked Halchette on my own account to exhibit them at his depot.

"Barely two days had passed when I received the following note: 'Victoire, arrivez—je suis un ane!' ('Victory, come quickly—I am a donkey!')

"The work had an immediate and great success. We had one hundred copies quickly bound, and from that moment the success of this and all my other illustrated works was guaranteed."

WIT AND HUMOR.

Passing around the hat is one way of getting the cents out of the meeting.

Men should learn humility. A lightning bug has six legs, a man only two.

The man who was thirteen days on a bicycle has just bought out a pantaloons factory.

People learn wisdom by experience. A man never wakes up the second baby to see it laugh.

Taking things as they come is not so very distressing. It is parting with them as they go that cuts one to the soul.

Eternal fitness was never more an expressively demonstrated fig than in the explosive name of the German pianist, Hammerfitt.

"We go in for the old flag," remarked the property-owner who was ordered to lay a new sidewalk along the front of his lot.

"How did you like the lecturer?" "I didn't like him at all. He gave us a perfect Niagara of words and only a rivulet of ideas."

What is the difference between freight and cargo. A horse-car conductor says the passengers make the freight, and the horse makes the car go.

"Is it injurious to eat before going to sleep?" asks a correspondent. Why no, not fatally injurious; but you just try eating after you go to sleep if you want to see a circus.

"See, mamma!" exclaimed a little child, as puss, with arching spine and elevated rudder, strutted around the table, "see, kitty's eaten so much she can't shut her tail down!"

You do not deal a death-blow to the Darwinian theory by saying, "Man descended from the monkey, but what did the monkey descend from?" The monkey descended from the tree.

"Mother, what have people got noses for?" asked an Austin child of her mother, who had seen better days. "To turn up at poor folks, my child," was the cynical response.

"I understand that your courtship with Charley is at an end." "Yes," said she: "Charley pressed his suit until it became threadbare, and then I gave him the sack."

A Kentucky lover, who swore by the great horn spoon that he'd like to die for his girl, stood on the river bank and saw another chap pull her from the water, and never even offered him 15 cents reward.

The thing now for city girls rusticating in the country is to whittle miniature hay-ricks out of white wood and send them to their admirers in town. This probably signifies "Come and make hay while the sun shines."

Things one would wished to have expressed differently: Musical maiden—"I hope I am not boring you, playing so much?" Enamored youth—"Oh, no! Pray go on! I—I'd so much sooner hear you play than talk!"

"George, what a lovely color for a reception dress," said Mrs. Jones to her husband, viewing the electric light on Niagara Falls from the balcony of the Clifton house. "Yes," said Mr. Jones, "and what a bath for Jumbo."

A Hoosier youth named Gosley or Gosling, probably the latter, saw a girl at church, courted her two hours, and at the end of three was married to her. A man who does up all his courting in two hours and marries misses lots of fun. It's like stuffing himself with peaches and cream in five minutes and then have having dyspepsia the rest of the year.

Gildower Wasn't in Kissing Humor.

Fido had been out for an afternoon walk on Kearney street. He had been inquiring into the bottom facts of the business of all other dogs. He had also been interviewing telegraph poles and lamp-posts as to who of his canine friends had called there that afternoon. Gildower Gillpenny was on his way to see the lovely Arabelly Anchovia. He overtook Fido, the petted pet of the petted heiress. They both arrived at the palatial residence at the same moment. They were both ushered into the charming presence by the same lackey. After a sweet smile for Gildower she rushed for Fido and imprinted kiss after kiss on the little pet's nose. Then turning to the palpitating young man she said, "Now, Gildower, kiss your birdie." The young man stood dazed for a moment; but, summoning up all the courage of his ancient race, he struck an attitude and said, "Not to-night. Ask me not why. It is a strange fancy. But I must leave. Adieu! adieu!" and he left the astonished maiden.—San Francisco Call.

A Philanthropist Dished.

It was a pathetic incident: The elderly gentleman was walking down Tenth street when the wail of a tender youth who had fallen on the sidewalk and broken the crockery in his dinner-pail smote upon his ear. "Never mind, my little lad; are you much hurt?" asked the benevolent graybeard. "No, sir; I'm not hurt," replied the youngster. "Then why do you cry?" "Because I'll git licked when I go home." "Well, well, my boy; go and buy another plate and cup, and your mother won't know the difference," said philanthropy, as he handed the lad a silver token. The boy took up the money, but set up a more dismal howl than before. "I'll get licked all the same—boo-hoo!" "Why so?" asked the interested gentleman. "'Cause you only give me ten cents, and the sucker I picked up yesterday give me fifty!" The venerable philanthropist strode along musing.—Philadelphia Record.

Bro. Gardner on Slang.

"If Brudder Pizarro Grant am in de hall to-night he will please step for'd," began the old man as Samuel Shin struck the triangle an sent its quivering notes dancing along the ceiling.

Brother Pizarro was present, and he stepped, his eyes having a squint of alarm and his knees losing their sand with every motion.

"Brudder Grant," continued the President, "you am a young man on de doak-step of life; you w'ar wery tight pants an' a wery short coat, an' a wery narrow hat, and you look decidedly wretch-ercht. De great world am befo' you. If you begin right no man dares bet two to one dat you won't do it in a Governor's chair befo' you am 50. If you begin wrong it will be safe to bet 1,600 to nuffin' dat you will bring up in State Prison befo' you am ten years older."

"Yes, sah, Ize tryin' to start right," said Pizarro as Brother Gardner stopped to swallow a pint of water.

"I hope so—I hope so, but doubt it, Brudder Grant. Ize had my eye on you fur some leetle time back, I doan' fink you will lie or steal or burgler or forge, but you has fallen into one werry bad habit. De odder day you met a friend in front of my cabin, an' when he axed if you war gwine on de excursion you replied dat you would 'gasp to gurgle.' On anoder occashun I heard you remark dat you would 'mix to murmur.' You also said dat you would 'cheese it to stifle.' Only an hour ago you told Waydown Bebee to 'cheese it,' an' you advised Pickles Smith to 'bet his sweet life.' What does all dese fings mean, Brudder Grant?"

"I doan' know," replied the victim, as he stood on one leg and scratched his head.

"Nor I, either. Ize looked up de Latin an' French an' German an' Greek languages, but I can't find any sich expreshun as 'hire a hall,' 'see you in de graveyard,' or 'I should smile.' Why do you make use of em?"

"I doan't know."

"Den stop it! If plain English am not good 'nuff fur you to 'spress your thoughts in, I'arn Spanish or Chinese. It am all right for a sweet young gal who has been frew college to remark dat she would 'titter to grin, but sich 'spreshuns doan' sound well comin' from a young man. If I should go home tonight an' tell my ole woman dat I would perspire to eventuate, or lithograph to animosity, she'd look me straight in de eye fur thirty seconds an' den would come a climax in which my hat, head an' a broomstick would be all mixed up.

"Return to your seat, Brudder Grant; go back an' sot down wid a determination to avoid slang an' do your talkin' squar' from de shoulder. When you git tired of beef go into a grocery an' ax fur codfish in plain English, an' doan' use any mo' oratory dan am necessary to secure full weight an' git rit of a quarter wid a hole in it. We will now purceed to split de reg'lar order of bizness down de back an' let out de sleeves."

He Conquered.

Congregations are often brought to the brink of an explosion of mirth without knowing it. Such was the case in a Hartford church, recently. The godly and eloquent pastor was in the midst of his powerful discourse. The large congregation hung upon his lips as he moved up to the climax of his argument. He, himself, was deeply absorbed in his work, as his ringing voice and forcible action showed.

Just then he somehow became aware of a distraction near at hand, and, glancing obliquely, espied a colossal wasp perched upon his left shoulder. A second glance was conclusive. The wasp was bridling and humping himself in a manner that meant mischief. He was in no haste, but, as if knowing his advantage, he leisurely performed those agile and ominous gymnastics which are the preparations and signals of assault. He would torment the helpless minister before stabbing him. All this the parson comprehended with concealed terror, meanwhile pushing along the vigor of his speech, and keeping up the boom of his discourse.

Mysterious is the complex movement of the human mind. Futile was the intimidation, fugacious the hope, vain the plan, fatal the delay of that wasp. Procrastination and pride were his destruction. An inspiration seized the parson, now working double lines of thought. His plan was formed and executed with such a rapidity and success that the congregation were ignorant of the splendid strategy. Raising his voice to an unwonted strain, he swung his right arm around to that left shoulder, plucked the astonished wasp therefrom, placed him upon the desk, and, shouting in stentorian tones, "Yes, my beloved hearers!" brought his clenched fist down upon that precise spot whereon his enemy lay with an energy that made the big Bible leap, raised a cloud of dust from the cushion, and carried complete conviction both to the body of the wasp and the minds and hearts of the spell-bound congregation. It was the climax of his discourse. So instantaneously was the manœuvre executed that no one detected the real occasion of it, and the edified hearers remarked to one another, as they left the church, the uncommon earnestness and vigor of their beloved pastor's delivery that day.

When a Chinaman on board a quarantined ship in San Francisco harbor desires to be taken ashore, he produces imitation pustules on his face and body by pinching his flesh with the moistened knuckles of his index and middle fingers, and thus leads the ship's doctor to declare him afflicted with the small-pox. The trick was the invention of a Chinese passenger on the City of Pekin when that steamer was in quarantine. He imparted it to about twenty of his moon-eyed companions, and they all pinched themselves, produced pustules and were removed forthwith to the pest house on shore. In a few days they were discharged as cured, and began work on a ranche on the San Joaquin full thirty days before the other passengers were landed. And after perpetrating the ruse one of the number was mean enough to tell the 'Frisco health officers how he had "heap foolee" the quarantine regulations. Such ingenuity is deserving of a better field.

Why should not men who think alike in politics vote together? Why should a mere party name keep them asunder?

Since the last Congressional Convention there has been no battle, but the County Conventions will soon be held, and then the fun will begin in earnest.

The free trade party of Wayne county is growing. The membership list now contains five hundred names. The old parties must get off the fence in Wayne county. They have straddled the tariff question long enough.

WE have received a copy of the annual catalogue of the Michigan Military Academy. This institution, though young in years, has taken a position among the best schools of the State. For a circular address Col. C. S. Rogers, Orchard Lake, Mich.

The Democratic Congressional Convention will be held at Adrian on Thursday next, Sept. 14th. We have heard several names mentioned for the nomination, but the two most prominent ones in this county are L. H. Salsbury, of Hudson, and Edwin R. Smith, of Clinton. Either one would make a strong candidate.

This is the way the defeat of Mr. Willitts strikes outsiders. The N. Y. World says: The Michigan Republicans have taken action which signifies beyond any possibility of doubt as to their feeling on the River and Harbor steal. They have renominated Horr and Burroughs, and are running Hubbell, the blackmailer, for the Senate, and they have retired into private life Mr. Willitts, who defied the dictation of Robeson and Hubbell, and voted for honesty and economy.

Senator Conkling declared at Chicago that anybody could carry Michigan. The Republicans must have acted on that hypothesis when they nominated Gov. Jerome. But he is not likely to have a walk-away. The Democrats and Greenbackers will all vote against him, the temperance alliance will oppose him, and the State military will work against him, while hundreds of Republicans will vote for him under protest, simply because they consider it their duty to stand by the party.

Arkansas held her state election on Monday last and Vermont followed on Tuesday. The former state went Democratic because a majority of the voters in that state are Democrats. Vermont went Republican for a similar reason. Next Monday Maine will wheel into line. Georgia will step to the line on the first Wednesday in October, and on the second Tuesday Ohio, West Virginia and Iowa will cast their ballots. The remaining states will hold their election on Tuesday, Nov. 7th.

The Greenback seceders' State ticket is having a hard time of it. Hon. O. G. Pennell, of De Witt, their candidate for Governor, declines and calls on every Greenbacker in the State to support the regular ticket. J. E. Nichols, of Lansing, their nominee for Attorney General, was a delegate to the regular convention and support that ticket. W. W. Kelly, of Barry, who was nominated for Auditor General, repudiates the bolt entirely. J. E. Simonson, for Secretary of State, declines.

The outlook for a heavy fall trade is most encouraging. The wheat crop will be the largest ever known in this country. Corn, oats, hay and other crops throughout the Northwestern States are turning out satisfactorily. The great Southern staples, cotton, tobacco, sugar and rice promise a bountiful yield. Abundant crops mean a healthy business distributed all through the channels of trade. The city and village merchants alike feel the impetus when the crops begin to move, and as soon as the farmers begin to spend the money received for their hay and grain, sugar and cotton, the manufacturer, jobber and retailer will all find sale for their wares. How true it is that the business prosperity of all classes depends on that of the farming community.

MY AMATEUR FARM.

NINETEENTH WEEK.

A Wonderful stream is the river of Time
As it runs through the realms of Tears
With a faultless rythm and a musical rhyme
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime
As it blends with the ocean of years.
—B. F. TAYLOR.

Old Time, in whose hands we deposit our notes
Is a miser who always wants guineas for groats;
He keeps all his customers still in arrears,
By lending them minutes and charging them years.
—HOLMES.

"I declare," said Columbus, as he donned his new slippers, a linen duster and a tall hat to go and look over the farm on Sunday morning, "how time does fly. It don't seem more'n a month or six weeks since I moved into your shanty, and yet the bulk of the summer is already gone. Hayin' and harvestin' are over with in good shape. The corn is makin' good progress, and the peas will be fit to cut this week. When I look back and see what I've accomplished with all the obstacles I've had to buck against, a profound feeling of satisfaction bubbles up in my buzzum, and I can exclaim, as Bob Ingersoll did when he landed on Plymouth Rock: 'There is a remedy for every wrong and a satisfaction for every soul.' What a blessed thing it is to have a clear conscience. Look at me. I stand five feet eight in my stockin's, and weigh from 170 to 180 pounds, accordin' as the weight is taken, before or after a meal. I take my rations reg'lar three times a day and a lunch just afore bed time. My sleep is as sound as Tiger's grinders and as clear as the rain water in our West cistern. I never have no trouble with the neighbors unless they refuse to lend things we're in need of, and can't get along without 'em. To be sure I boot Ellic once in a while, but only when he deserves it, and it generally hurts me more'n it does him. As the heft of the summer's work is now over, I expect to take it a little easier the rest of the season, and that reminds me that the kickin' cow ought to be dried up. She has ruined six milk pails already since I come here, and done more to keep my rheumatiz on deck than all other things put together. Since the 4th of July I've had Ellic milk her, and I find it a great savin' of shoe leather, for I havn't had to boot Ellic a single once from that day to this." During this conversation Columbus and I were walking leisurely down the lane to the cornfield. On getting there he found that the Captain had been following behind, and had devoured about two feet of his linen duster. He had bought the duster the evening before, especially for Sunday wear. Columbus was terribly angry, and had it not been the Sabbath day the Captain would have been converted into mutton on the spot.

Monday, Aug. 8th.—Columbus plowed out the raspberries, and made a pen for the eight little porkers that arrived on the night express. Ellic put a handle on the grindstone and ground the scythe preparatory to cutting peas to-morrow.

Tuesday, Aug. 9th.—Columbus and Ellic both went into the pea-patch this morning. Ichabod cut the peas with a scythe, while Ellic raked them into bunches with a four-tined fork. Columbus swings the scythe to perfection. He takes down everything that crosses his path, of whatever character, and though it is rough on the scythe, it is good for the soil. During the day they cut and bunched up a plump half acre of peas, pig weeds, thistles, raspberry brush and cobble stones.

Wednesday, Aug. 10th.—The boys finished the pea harvest to-day. I had to buy three new scythes and one new snath, but I did not begrudge this expense, as the pea crop was so well secured.

Thursday, Aug. 11th.—Columbus cut the patch of Hungarian grass to-day. He first tried the scythe and then the cradle, and finally fell back on the mowing machine. The knives were rusted in the bar, but he soon thawed them loose with a little kerosene oil, and the grass was finished without any mishap save the breaking of one whiffletree and tearing up two young apple trees.

Friday, Aug. 12th.—The men turned and bunched up the Hungarian grass, and then prepared a patch for turnips. Although rather late in the season Columbus says we must have some turnips. They will be good for table use and also for stock. He claims that no farm crop pays better than turnips except peas, and as a seasoning for butter, turnips beat peas, two to one. If frost should hold off till Thanksgiving we could get a pretty good crop of turnips yet.

Saturday, Aug. 13th.—The men drew in Hungarian grass in the forenoon. Had two good loads. They then made drills for the turnips with a log chain, made a hole for each seed with a potato masher, and carefully covered them with a fire shovel. This is a slow process, but Ichabod says it never fails to bring turnips in time. Only give him time and Columbus can accomplish wonders.

Old Time, in whose hands is the weal of the crops,
Like an old-fashioned clock, neither falters nor stops,
But keeps running on, with each breath of the breeze
To bring up the garden truck, turnips and peas.

NINTH ANNUAL REUNION

Of the Soldiers and Sailors of Lenawee County at the City of Adrian.

The 30th day of August, 1882, dawned bright and beautiful, the day that had been set for the meeting of the war veterans of land and sea, who had met annually for the past nine years as an association, and to renew old acquaintances, which, twenty years ago, had been formed, and which four years of fighting and suffering side by side had bound tighter than brotherhood. The morning train brought a large number of veterans who were headed by the K. T. band and conducted to Dean's opera house, where a large crowd of veterans from the city and the surrounding villages had already congregated. The first thing to be done was to collect the fee of 25 cents from each member of the association and presenting a badge to each man. The number of applicants for membership were so great that the hour of 12 had nearly arrived before the meeting was called to order for the regular business, and the association had reached nearly 200 members. The minutes of the last meeting were then read and approved, when, on motion, the reading was dispensed with. Treasurer B. F. Graves being absent, the report was read by C. E. Rogers, Secretary pro tem. $47.50 was the balance in hand. Col. Drew then moved that the next meeting be held at Blissfield, which was supported and carried, and the 10th annual reunion will take place at Blissfield on the last Wednesday in Aug., 1883. The election of officers was next in order, and on motion Dr. Parker, of Blissfield, was chosen and unanimously elected as President of the association for the following year. Dr. Parker was called for and responded briefly, thanking the association for the honor conferred on him. D. B. Morgan, of Morenci, was elected Vice President; H. M. Cole as Secretary, and B. F. Graves, of Adrian, still retains the office of Treasurer. The tattered flag of the 4th Michigan Infantry held a conspicuous place on the walls of the opera house. The business of the meeting being over, Col. Drew then formed the line of march for Lawrence park, the K. T. band at the head, the Morenci and Ogden Posts G. A. R. next, followed by all the ex-officers of the late war, the members of the association and citizens bringing up the rear. Several veterans of the Mexican, Blackhawk and war of 1812 marched in the line. The company marched to the grand stand of the park, where the program of the day was to be carried out. Rev. M. Saxton invoked divine blessing on the vast audience. Then followed an address of welcome by Mayor Wm. Corbin, with a response by D. B. Morgan. The band played "Hail Columbia," after which Mrs. McCann gave a recital entitled "Hooker at Mount Lookout." It was a splendid recitation, and the delivery was excellent. Mrs. McCann was introduced as the niece of the "Hero of Chickamauga," and was received with prolonged cheers. The Arion Glee Club was the next on the program, and rendered a very fine song, which closed the program for the forenoon, and the line of march was again taken up and headed for Floral Hall, where the citizens of Adrian had prepared a bountiful repast. Tables, capable of seating 300, were already spread.

After the soldier's hunger had been appeased, they again returned to the grand stand where the remainder of program was given. The exercises opened by music from the K. T. band, followed by a five minutes' speech from Col. Drew. R. A. Watts followed in a five minutes' speech. C. R. Miller was called upon for "Reminiscences of the 18th," but being absent, Geo. Youngs, of Toledo, took his place, and having served 9 months of his time in the Andersonville prison, his remarks were quite interesting, though brief. Another song by the club and then "Our Honored Dead," with response by standing in silence, and those veterans standing in silence with uncovered heads made a very impressive scene. The company were then favored with another recitation by Mrs. McCann entitled "Forever and Forever." More music by the band. Then Capt. J. H. Fee was called upon for a speech on "Volunteers and Regulars," but he failed to respond, and volunteer speeches were listened to from the members. All then joined in singing "Hail Columbia," and after giving three cheers for the ladies and citizens of Adrian they dispersed.

An ox thief, giving his name as Daniel Smith, arrested at Big Rapids with a yoke of oxen stolen from a farmer near Hesperia.

The fly wheels of the gang at Hamilton & McGregor's mill, South Bay City, flew all to pieces, demolishing things generally, but hurting no one.

Frank Butler, 12 years old, Eaton Rapids, poured powder on the ground and set fire to it, to see what it would do. He found out. Doctor will save one eye, possibly both.

A wicked, cantankerous hired man got a twist on the tongue of farmer Potter's balky horse, south of Corunna, and twisted and hauled away until he tore the beast's tongue completely off.

"The regular annual attempt to revive the Grand Rapids & Saginaw railroad company" has been made. Ten miles of it were graded 10 years ago, since which nothing has been done.

Tuscola county had almost become superstitious from a clanking sound in the air at different times and places. All is now explained by the shooting of an owl, with a steel trap and 14 inches of chain dangling from one foot.

Seven of the 60 cattle brought from Iowa to Grand Ledge two weeks ago have died from some disease resembling rinderpest. They die quickly when taken. Possibly change of water and feed has to do with it. The herd cost $3,000.

The Fowlerville Review reports the finding of the bones of a mastodon in White Oak, Ingham Co. The bone from the knee to the ankle is four feet long and one foot thick, short rib five feet long, a part of the horn or trunk four feet long and six inches through at the smaller end. The animal must have stood 25 feet high.

About 40 survivors of the Fifth Michigan infantry attended the reunion at Capac, and all had a good time. E. H. Shook, of Detroit, was elected president; vice president, L. D. Owen, Farmington; second vice president, Henry Miller, Saginaw; third vice president, A. D. Stevens, Plymouth; secretary, T. J. West, Detroit; treasurer, P. B. Rose, Chicago; historian, A. K. IF any of our citizens have business in Detroit, we advise them to take advantage of the excursion next Thursday and go cheap. Only $1.75 for the round trip.

WE are glad to note that the Tecumseh Lumber Company is getting a fine start in business. They have a good location and keep a full assortment of goods in the lumber line.

THE M. E. conference will be in session next week at Detroit. The excursion on Thursday will give those who wish to attend a good opportunity to visit a session of that body.

DETROIT is one of the most attractive cities in this country. The city itself, with its broad and handsome streets, its parks, etc., is very pleasant, but the river is simply magnificent. A ride on the river is delightful. Those who attend the excursion next Thursday will, no doubt, feel themselves amply repaid for the entire trip by a ride on one of the river steamers, which may be had for only ten cents.

Adrian Record: Yesterday afternoon Mr. Thomas Underwood and wife, of Palmyra, drove to the city with a span of colts, and on their return, a short distance out on the Treat road, one end of the neckyoke broke, letting the wagon tongue down and frightening the colts which started to run. A wagon being ahead of them Mr. Underwood, to avoid a collision, reined the team out to the roadside, when the wagon tongue plowing into the ground broke off, and the vehicle was upset into the ditch, the box turning over Mrs. Underwood and making her a prisoner. She was rescued unharmed, however.

A PLEASANT SURPRISE PARTY.

On the afternoon of August 24 the friends of Mrs. C. H. Smith met in the Lecture Room of the M. E. Church, and about one-half past 3 marched in a body to her residence taking possession of her home as well as taking her by surprise. The event was in honor of her birthday, and also in anticipation of her soon leaving us to take up her home in a distant city. Each one was provided with sufficient eatables so that at 6 o'clock the party were invited into the lawn adjoining B. F. Baxter's residence to participate of the bountiful supply of eatables provided for the occasion. The table presented a very inviting and pleasing picture, being decorated with beautiful flowers provided for the occasion. Before partaking of supper the company sang the very appropriate hymn, "Blessed be the tie that binds," after which Father Sherman pronounced the blessing, then Mrs. Merritt, in a few fitting words, presented the hostess with a beautiful silver cake basket and pickle castor as a token of their love and esteem. The occasion was rendered more enjoyable by the presence of Mrs. A. J. Biglow and mother, who took the party by surprise, driving over from Adrian in the morning and returning in the evening. It was altogether a very pleasant and enjoyable affair, and will long be remembered by all who partook of it, and no doubt be often thought of by our sister when thinking of her Tecumseh home and friends. We regret very much to have her leave us, as her presence in the M. E. Church will be sadly missed, as she was a very efficient and faithful member. It can be truly said of her she hath done what she could in the interest of Christianity and temperance.

We desire to express our thanks to our neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy with us during the long illness of our beloved mother.

Why Should They.

No man or woman can do satisfactory work when the brain is dull, the nerves unsteady, the system relaxed and they feel generally wretched. Why should anybody drag through their work in this condition, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic will at a moderate cost give them the strength and will to perform their duties satisfactorily.

THE ANNUAL SCHOOL MEETING.

Adoption of the Annual Report and Election of Two Trustees.

The regular annual school meeting of this District was held at the Central School building last Monday evening. The attendance was not large, and with the exception of a little discussion on the telephone question, the proceedings were decidedly tame.

The moderator, Mr. E. B. Wood, called the meeting to order after which the minutes of the last annual meeting were read.

The report of the Board of Trustees for the present year was then presented, together with an appendix showing the items of expenditure in detail and on motion, the same was accepted and adopted. Under the head of new business the question of connecting the school buildings with the local telephone exchange was introduced. The expediency of so doing was thoroughly discussed pro and con, and letters were read from Messrs Mason and Corbin of the Adrian Board of Trustees, and Prof. Cocker, Supt. of their schools, all of which spoke in the highest praise of the advantages of the telephone in their schools. A motion to leave the matter to the discretion of the school board was lost. A motion instructing the board not to put in telephones was also lost. Thereupon a motion by A. W. Mills, directing the board to contract for two telephones—one in the Central and one in the East building—was carried.

The meeting then proceeded to the election of two trustees in place of David McNair and Samuel Catlin, whose term of office had expired. Dr. House and J. N. Satterthwaite were appointed tellers. Ballots were taken for each place, the final result of which was the election of Messrs McNair and Catlin as their own successors for the ensuing three years.

THE following from the Battle Creek Journal explains how Marshall closed up her bonus:

Marshall succeeded last night at a rousing meeting, in raising the last $10,000 of the necessary $70,000 for securing the T. & M. railroad. The event, as soon as it was made known, was celebrated with bonfires and a general rejoicing. One or two citizens of means, who refused to contribute in any manner to the success of the subscription list, were treated to a serenade in which the principal instruments were house fiddles and boat horns. Speeches were made in which the future of Marshall was brought out in glowing terms, and especially colored to please the subscribers to the enterprise and the property owners. It is to be sincerely hoped that this promised acquisition may do all for Marshall, which its well wishers desire. Certainly, the citizens of Marshall deserve especial mention for their liberality in the matter.

Naturally pale invalids are greatly improved in health and appearances by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens mind and body, brightens the eyes, gives rosy cheeks, and creates a perfect picture of health, strength and beauty.

THE Misses DeWolf entertained a company of young people last Monday evening to witness the blooming of their night-blooming cereus.

THE RAILROAD CANVASS.

The canvass for aid on the Toledo & Milwaukee is progressing in the main quite satisfactorily, although in some quarters the work is not crowded as it should be.

Marshall has completed her bonus of $70,000 last Monday, and on Tuesday our committee received a telegram from there announcing the result. Homer is working her aid up vigorously, and the intermediate towns to Addison are all pushing the canvass. Addison has nearly raised her bonus and will undoubtedly finish soon. Cambridge and Ridgeway are both at work with reasonable success. Last Saturday evening a meeting was held at Britton station, and the school house was crowded. The interest manifested was excellent, and committees were appointed to go work at once.

A public meeting was held at the opera house in this village last Tuesday which was attended by a large majority of the substantial business men of Tecumseh. We were pleased to see also a liberal sprinkling of farmers present. The exact state of the canvass was shown, and the necessity set forth of taking steps to expedite the work farther. In the absence of Wm. Hayden, President Mills was called to the chair. Remarks were made by Mr. Mills, J. S. Strong, R. S Pardington, Dr. Hamilton, J. G. Roberts, S. C. Stacy, and also by Mr. Scovill, of Coldwater, who is here to assist in our canvass. A committee of ten special canvassers was chosen, and they met at Mr. DeMett's office yesterday morning. Each one took an installment of the old notes and began business. We are bound to close the canvass up in Tecumseh by next Saturday night.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Republican State Convention assembled at Kalamazoo on Wednesday of last week. Every county in the state was fully represented. Five of the present state officials were renominated, and four new men were chosen. The state ticket as completed is as follows:

*Governor—D. H. Jerome, Saginaw.
*Lt. Governor—Moreau S. Crosby.
Sec'y of State—H. C. Conant, Monroe.
State Treasurer—E. H. Butler, Detroit.
Auditor Gen'l—W. C. Stevens, of Iosco.
Com'r State Land Office—M. S. Newell, of Genesee.
*Att'y Gen'l—J. J. Van Riper, Berrien.
*Sup't Public Instruction—S. C. Moffat, Grand Traverse.
*State Board of Education—B. W. Jenks, St. Clair.

Those markedl (*) renominated.

The platform adopted was unusually lengthy, and hence we give a synopsis of it:

The platform records with sorrow the loss of Garfield, and resolves that Arthur is worthy of the country's trust. It declares loyalty to the party and demands the free ballot all over the country; denounces polygamy as the disgrace of our civilization; insists that care must be taken in the revision of the tariff, and that protection to American manufacturers, etc., must be maintained. It favors a national civil service and insists that dangerous monopolies must be prevented. In the temperance cause it is demanded that the prohibition question be submitted to the people (tremendous applause). It protests against discrimination in transportation; indorses Jerome's administration; arraigns the democrat party as the same old bourbon element which had neither repented nor reformed, and denounces the fusion of Michigan greenbackers and democrats as a shameful political bargain and sale and political prostitution.

ATTENTION, YE READERS.

All persons interested in the organization of a Chautauqua Scientific and Literary Circle are invited to meet in Room No. 1, in M. E. church, on Friday, September 8, at 7:30 P. M., sharp. The object of the meeting will be stated and the plans submitted. Nearly 3000 are pursuing the prescribed course of reading. While the Chautauqua S.S. assembly originated with Dr. L. H. Vincent, who is a Methodist, yet it is not distinctively Methodistic. Dr. Vincent is superintendent of instruction but there are associated with him as counsellors, Rev. Dr. Abbott, Congregationalist; Rev. Dr. Gibson, Presbyterian; Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, Baptist; and Rev. Bishop Warren, Methodist. At Chautauqua, a man is not known as a denominational man. Methodists are no more numerous or more prominent than other folks. Among the distinguished lecturers this year were Rev. Dr. Thomas, of Brooklyn, Baptist, and Rev. Prof. Patton, Presbyterian. This is one of the great excellencies of the institution. It is abreast of the religious union of the age. There never was but one Chautauqua; there never can be another. There never was but one C. S. L. C; there never will be another.

Already sixteen Tecumsehites have enrolled themselves as members of this great "peoples university," in the class of '86. Let all who desire to enter upon a systematic course of reading and mental improvement attend this meeting.

A Big Success.

Children's Droll Sayings.

Children's remarks are at times even more entertaining than their comical queries and replies.

One of two children who were amusing themselves by coloring pictures suddenly exclaimed,—

"Well, how stupid of you to paint that cow blue!"

"Oh, its blue with the cold!" quickly observed the other. "Don't you see it is winter, and the poor thing is most frozen?"

A little girl on being told something which greatly amused her, said that she would remember it the whole of her life, and when she forgot it she would write it down."

A canary had begun to twitter a little after moulting, but was unable to sing its entire tune. A little four-year-old, after listening to one of the bird's vain attempts to master his tune, said very composedly, "Mamma, birdie forgot the other half of the verse."

Canaries bring to mind their enemies, the cats. A gentleman had a cat which had five kittens. On ordering three of them to be drowned, his little boy said,—

"Pa, do not drown them in cold water. Warm it first; they may catch cold."

A relative of the writer's crossing the Channel when he was a very small boy, suffered much from sea-sickness. Hearing a good deal of talk o board about the motion of the steamer, he confidently informed his parents on landing, that [illegible] any motion to it.

The following remark of a little girl shows an opinion of her elders the reverse of flattering.

"Oh dear!" she exclaimed to her doll. "I do wish you would sit still. I never saw such an uneasy thing in all my life. Why don't you act like grown folks, and be still and stupid for a while?"

In contrast to this was the delicate compliment paid to his mother. The family were discussing at the supper-table the qualities which go to make up the good wife. Nobody thought the little fellow had been listening or could understand the talk, until he leaned over the table and kissed his mother, and said,—

"Mamma, when I get big enough, I'm going to marry a lady just exactly like you." —Christian at Work.

The Man Who Circled.

A young man of 23, built like an ox and full of ambition, came in on one of the popular excursions to Detroit says the Free Press, and while idling around the Central Market caught sight of a policeman about half as big as himself. He was instantly taken with an itching to try conclusions, but having a grain of prudence in his head he inquired of a stall-keeper:

"Suppose I should walk up to that officer and tell him I could lay him on his back—what would he do?"

"Tell you to move on."

"Then suppose I circled around and came down on him and offered to bet that I could stand him on his head?"

"He'd probably give you another chance to clear out."

"Well, I'm aching to try him on, and I'll begin now."

He didn't lose a minute in walking up to the officer and asserting his belief that he could dust the floor with his back.

"You move on!" placidly replied the officer.

The young man took a circle around and came back with the information that he could pick the blue coat and make his heels kick the air.

"I tell you to go away from me!" exclaimed the officer as he walked on.

The young man sailed off again, and at the end of ten minutes a row was heard at the further end of the market. People rushed down to see the officer wollloping the bluffer over the empty benches and rubbing his back on the floor, and the handcuffs had just been snapped on when the stall-keeper came up and asked:

"Well, have you got through circling around?"

"Say! what a fool I was!" replied the young man. "You told me how the first and second bluffs would work, and durn my buttons if I didn't forget to ask about the third! Why, I hadn't finished telling him that I didn't want over fifteen seconds to turn him wrongside out and sell him for pulp when he knocked a barrel to pieces with my heels!"

Fickle Fashion.

In cutting up an oak tree in Maine says the Milwaukee Sun, a lock of red hair was found so far inside the tree that it is estimated the hair was put in the tree 240 years ago. It was probably cut off and put in there by a sensitive girl when red hair was out of style, and a red-haired girl was laughed at and twitted about the sanguinary color of her head covering. We are not 240 years old, but can remember when a red-headed girl was a burden to herself, because her hair gave her away. A young man had to have a good deal of independence who would escort a red-haired girl anywhere, and the girls invariably became old maids. It would have been a picnic to those girls if they could have lived about these days, when a girl with beautiful red hair is considered about the sweetest flower in nature's garden. Now that we remember it, the red-haired girls always were good-looking and smarter than chain lightning, and it is a confounded shame they didn't come into style years ago. They are not cutting off their hair and burying it nowadays.

A commercial traveler thus relates his experience: He and his companion were the sole occupants of the smoking-car. They tried to converse, but the road was so rough that they were pitched from side to side like a ship's passengers. At last four were able to make each other understand. One said, "Ican, the old thing is running smoother." To which Dan replies, "Yes; I guess she has got off the track."

Montreal is getting in about the same muddle with its streets as that from which Toronto is just escaping. In the last ten years the city has spent $1,500,000 on her streets, and has nothing to show for it.

"Cedarcroft."

A Visit to the Home of the Late Bayard Taylor.

In passing from Oxford to West Chester I made a detour from the main road and visited Cedarcroft, the home of the late Bayard Taylor. The place is in charge of a courteous and intelligent negro couple, who were busily engaged in putting the house and grounds in order in anticipation of the arrival of Mrs. Taylor and her daughter.

A farmer whose lands adjoin Cedarcroft, said that Mrs. Taylor and her daughter were very kind and polite to those who made pilgrimages to Cedarcroft. "They are a good bit like Bayard, he said. "His was kindness and courtesy personified, and a master hand to entertain by his talk and stories.—Some folks thought a good deal of his lectures, but in comparison with his conversation, they were constrained and unentertaining. Lying under the cedars he would smoke his long-stemmed pipe and talk about his travels, about books and everything under the sun, in a vein that was charming beyond my poor powers to express. He has often kept me by the hour, and though I am more than ordinarily fond of music I have never heard a song in my life which was sweeter to listen to than the careless, half-earnest, half-jocular dissertations in which Bayard was wont to indulge, as he pulled away at his pipe and sent the smoke wreaths upward."

Another neighbor said, "I used to go to school with Bayard. He was always a fine fellow—chock full of spirit and snap. He was never so happy, boy or man, as when he was doing some of us a favor. Yes," he added, reflectively, "Bay was a good neighbor; he did a help for the town, and when he died in Berlin, Kennett lost a friend."

"Your people about here," I ventured, "came to think, after a while, that he was considerable of a man, I suppose?"

"Oh, yes. Long at first, when he was learning printin', and got to writing poetry and wantin' to go to Europe, folks thought he was kinder odd, like, but we got used to all that, and some of us used to read his books. He was a good neighbor, and most of us around here cried when he died."

It was gratifying to know that Kennett was disposed to forgive the literary transgressions. I passed on smiling, and contrasted the different views of Taylor's whilom schoolmate and Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Amid the sighing of the cedars the latter's beautiful tribute to Bayard Taylor came back to me, and with a full heart I murmured the closing lines, and felt that they were true:

And when the summer winds sweep over Cedarcroft,
He'll come again. I can not make him dead

Cedarcroft is advertised for sale. It is picturesquely situated, and the house—a substantial structure of unfinished brick, built in 1859—stands embowered among a grove of cedars. The house where he was born stands directly across the road from Cedarcroft, but his parents, who are very old, live in a small brick house at Kennett Square, a few miles distant. They have recently celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage, and are still hale and hearty. A modest monument, recently erected, marks the poet's last resting-place, in Longwood cemetery, a mile from Cedarcroft. [illegible]

A Strong Bull.

The following occurs in a recent interview with Rufus Hatch:

Reporter—I suppose I can write you down as an unqualified "bull" on the country, at least.

Mr. Hatch—Why, I can not be anything but a "bull" when I look at this country, its growth, and possibilities. In the first place, it comprises within its limits every shade of climate suitable for every creature of the earth; it is capable of producing everything or anything that a man need to eat, or wear, or use. And then the growth of the country is marvelous. When I went to Chicago in 1850 it had a population of 29,963; in 1860 the population had increased to 112,172; in 1870 it numbered 288,977, and in 1881 the statistics show a population of 575,000.

The growth of Chicago is but a sample of all the other towns, cities, counties, and states west of the Alleghany mountains—and it has all happened within my business knowledge. When I went to Chicago in 1850 there were only forty-two miles of railroad west of the lakes. It was called the Galena railroad, and was an old-fashioned strap rail running from Chicago to Elgin. It may be interesting for you to know that I was one of a corps of engineers that did the first day's work that was ever done on a railroad in Wisconsin. I held on to the kind end of the chain and stopped it at the hundred-foot stake. That is the way I commenced engineering. And at that time I traveled over hundreds of miles of country without a house on it, where it is now thickly settled with farms, villages, and cities. No man can visit the east, west, southwest, and northwest without returning a "bull." I traveled about five thousand miles in the west in May, and saw enough to convince me that an advance in the stock market would take place. The decline has taken place, and a large majority of stocks are liable to improve; indeed the boom has already commenced.

Col. Ingersoll says it is absurd to ask him to believe that seven men could or did move down the walls of Jericho with rams' horns. We do not know how rams' horns sound, but if they are anything like band instruments, seven amateurs for practice might do a good deal of damage.

Nine Physicians Outdone.

It is generally considered a pretty difficult task to outdo a physician, but the following will conclusively prove where nine were completely outdone. Mrs. Helen Pharviz, 331 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill., was treated for Consumption by nine physicians, and all pronounced her case incurable. Seven bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption completely cured her. Doubting ones, please drop her a postal card and convince yourselves. Sold by all druggists.

Gossip.

What is a cure for gossip? Simply culture. There is a great deal of gossip that has no malignity in it. Good-natured people talk about their neighbors because, and only because, they have nothing else to talk about. Gossip is always a personal confession, either of malice or imbecility, and the young should not only shun it, but by the most thorough culture relieve themselves from all temptations to indulge in it. It is low, frivolous, and too often a dirty business. There are country neighborhoods in which it rages like a pest. Churches are split in twain by it. Neighbors make enemies by it for life. In many persons it degenerates into a chronic disease, which is practically incurable.—New York Home Journal.

Already there are evidences that those persons were right who looked for a large increase in the exports from Italy to Germany of game, fruits and vegetables as a consequence of the opening of the St. Gothard Railway. One large firm alone has just concluded, with the railway a contract for 500 car-loads of game and vegetables during the present season. Cherries and other fruits from beyond the Alps have already in large quantities found their way into Southern Germany.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

[illegible] past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

Reckoning Him Up.

A Western engineer tells the following story which happened in his own experience:—

"Once the train stopped to get wood and water at a small station in Indiana. While this operation was going on, I observed two green-looking countrymen in homespun curiously inspecting the locomotive, and occasionally giving vent to expressions of astonishment. Finally one of them looked up and said,—

"'Stranger, are this a locomotive?'

"'Certainly it is,' I replied. 'Did you never see one before?'

"'No, haven't never seen one. Me'n Bill came to the station to-night on purpose. Them's the b'iler, ain't it?'

"'Yes.'

"'What yer call that yer in?'

"'This is the cab.'

"'And this big wheel?'

"'That's the driving-wheel.'

"'And that big thing on the top is the chimbley, I suppose?'

"'Precisely.'

"'Be you the engineer—the man what runs the machine?'

"'I am.'

"After eying me closely a minute, the man said to his mate,—

"'I say, Bill, it don't take much of a man to be an engineer.'"

Relief Found at Last.

Carmel, Ind.

A. Kiefer—Dear Sir: I was afflicted with derangement of the Liver, which caused a "general" derangement of my whole system. Had three-day ague for two years, from which I found no relief until induced to try your Taraxine, which I am happy to say affected a cure. I am enjoying fine health and have had no ague for over one year. Yours, etc., John Jeffries.

Some Curious Calculations.

A rapid penman can write thirty words in a minute. To do this he must draw his pen through the space of a rod, sixteen and a half feet. In forty minutes his pen travels a furlong. We make, on an average, sixteen curves or turns of the pen in writing each word. Writing thirty words in a minute, we must make 480 turns to each minute; in an hour, 28,000; in a day of only five hours, 144,000; in a year of 300 such days 43,200,000. The man, therefore, who made 1,000,000 strokes with his pen was not at all remarkable. Many men—newspaper writers, for instance—make 4,000,000. Here we have, in the aggregate, a mark 300 miles long to be traced on paper by such a writer in a year.

WHAT HAPPENED TO MR. JOSEPH BEACH.

Stone in the Kidney Expelled after Using Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" About two Weeks.

One of the most remarkable cases that has ever been brought to the notice of the public is that of Mr. J. S. Beach, of Stone Bridge, Ulster Co., N. Y. Mr. Beach had suffered since October 18th, 1871, from the presence of Calculus or Stone in the right Kidney. No less than seven physicians were employed at different times, to whom Mr. Beach paid hundreds of dollars for medical treatment, with only temporary relief from his agony.

By the urgent solicitations of his friends he was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy"—experienced a marked improvement from the first day he began to use the medicine; on the 15th of September he voided a stone as large as could be passed through the natural channel.

Mr. Beach concludes a long letter to Dr. Kennedy by saying: "It will always give me pleasure to recommend the "Favorite Remedy" to those who may be suffering from difficulties of the Kidneys and Bladder, or any disorders arising from an impure state of the blood. The "Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. The Doctor's only address is Rondout, New York.

A Conjurer's Trick.

A man who has had a large success in deceiving the public is suspicious of those who excel him in winning popular favor. Often he is cunning enough to detect and expose their methods. Prof. Proctor illustrates this rivalry in an amusing story he tells of Maelzel's automaton chess-player, and of the way the fraud was once successfully exposed.

A conjurer drew large crowds in a German town to his tricks of legerdemain, until Maelzel came into the place with his famous chess-player. Then the crowd deserted the conjurer for the new attraction. Vexed at his loss of patronage, he was determined to find out the secret of the new cheat.

He attended the exhibition frequently, and became convinced there was a man of small stature hid in the body of the chess-player. But he could not convince others of it, as Maelzel's expose of the interior seemed to leave no room for a hiding-place.

But the conjurer was equal to the emergency. One evening, while the crowd were watching eagerly a game of chess, he raised suddenly a cry of fire. One or two accomplices in the secret joined in the cry.

The trick was successful. He had the satisfaction of seeing the automaton sharing in the general alarm, and shaking convulsively as if it were going to pieces. Maelzel was compelled to hide it behind a curtain to quiet it again. The conjurer was satisfied at the exposure of his rival.

Putting Up a Job.

Each new comer at a Paris art studio is put through "a course of sprouts" before he is admitted to full fellowship. The latest practical joke is as follows: The new-comer on entering the studio and proceeding to select a seat is informed by the senior of the corps that he has been made the subject of an important wager.

"What wager?"

"A bet has been made that you will not open your box of colors. I have taken it because I am sure you will."

"But why did they bet I wouldn't?"

"That I can't say, but they say you daren't but I know you will."

"I'll soon show you that I will." (Draws a key from his pocket and approaches the box. The others start back anxiously.)

"What have you fellows been putting in this box?"

(No answer. They slowly retreated.)

"I know you are only trying to fool me."

He thrusts the key into the key-hole. With wild shrieks of alarm half the students throw themselves on the floor, and the others dash to the door and fly down stairs.

The novice drops the box in a panic, and flies after them. As soon as they have all reached the street he is informed that there was nothing in the box.—N. Y. World.

Mullins.

Another Congressman from Tennessee, named Mullins (dead now, poor old fellow!), was exceedingly playful. But the funniest thing Mullins ever did was on a very mournful occasion. A Virginia member, I believe, had been killed in a row by the Ku-Klux, I think. At any rate the funeral orations were being pronounced, and more lies were being told than usual on such occasions. Finally, Mullins' turn came, and for him it was a great occasion, and great use he made of it, if you will believe me. It was the most ridiculous speech ever made in Congress. Notwithstanding the pall which hung over the chamber, the audience was convulsed. One sentence of the oration I remember, and can never forget. Here it is. He referred, of course, to the murdered Congressman: "He has gone down to his grave wrapped in the peaceful soliloquy of his own blood." The House, at this burst of pathos, burst out laughing, and its members could not restrain themselves. I believe John McElhone and some of the members afterward fixed up the speech in decent style.

The Richest Newsboy.

Without doubt the richest newsboy in the country is Mike Mykens, of Denver, Col. He is supposed to be worth at least $50,000, which he has invested in Denver real estate. He is not yet ready, however, to retire from business, but from early morning until midnight may be seen upon the streets crying "Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Kansas City morning papers." In connection with his paper stand he has a bootblack's chair, which he generally leaves in charge of an assistant. He sells his papers at a uniform price of 10 cents each, and long experience has made him very expert in detecting at a glance from what part of the country any one of the strangers who throng the streets of Denver hails. "Run after that old man with a white choker and sell him a Boston Herald," he will say to his assistant; or, "work off a San Francisco Bulletin on that slippery-looking cuss under the awning." Mykens is no longer a boy, but he is likely to remain a newsboy for years to come.

It would be difficult to enumerate the many and various uses of the cocoanut palm. From the juice of the blossom and of the fruit the Singalese makes his toddy; the milk of the nut is his beverage, and the kernel, besides the valuable oil it yields, is prominent as an article of diet. Even the refuse from the oil-presses serves as food for his poultry and cattle and, when partly decomposed, as manure for the very trees from which it came. The husks are his fuel, the shells his vessels, and the coir he finds a suitable fibre for his ropes and nets. The leaves provide him with dishes, a roof above his head and a shelter from the sun; while a slip of the bark acts as a simple bolt. After all this array there is still the trunk, which furnishes material for his house, his furniture, domestic utensils, fences, boats, and lastly his coffin.

A steam whistle has just been finished at Bridgeport of which the sound can be heard fifty miles; but do not tell any circus man about it, or next season he will have a whole series of them in a calliope.

Bill Nye's Polar Expedition.

The Boomerang reporter sent out to find the north pole eighteen months ago has just been heard from. An exploring party recently found portions of his remains in latitude 4 11 44, longitude sou'west by sou' from the pole, and near the remains the following fragment of a diary:

July 1, 1881.—Have just been out searching for a sunstroke and signs of a thaw. Saw nothing but ice floe and snow as far as the eye could reach. Think we will have snow this evening unless the wind changes.

July 2.—Spent the forenoon exploring to the northwest for right of way for a new equatorial and north pole railroad that I think would be of much value to commerce. The grade is easy and the expense would be slight. Ate my last dog to-day. Had intended him for the 4th, but got too hungry, and ate him raw with vinegar. I wish I was at home eating Boomerang pieie.

July 3.—We had quite a frost last night, and it looks this morning as though the corn and small fruits must have suffered. It now two weeks since the last of the crew died and left me alone. Ate the leather ends of my suspenders to-day for dinner. I did not need the suspenders, anyway, for by tightening up my pants I find they will stay on all right, and I don't look for any ladies to call, so that even if my pants came off by some oversight, nobody would be shocked.

July 4.—Saved up some tar roofing and a bottle of mucilage for my Fourth of July dinner and gorged myself today. The exercises were very poorly attended and the celebration rather a failure. It is clouding up in the west and I'm afraid we're going to have snow. Seems to me we're having an all-fired late spring here this year.

July 5.—Didn't drink a drop yesterday. It was the quietest Fourth I ever put in. I never felt so little remorse over the way I celebrated as I do today. I didn't do a thing yesterday that I was ashamed of except to eat the remainder of a box of shoe blacking for supper. To-day I ate my last bootheel, stewed. Looks as though we might have a hard winter.

July 6.—Feel a little apprehension about something to eat. My credit is all right here, but there is no competition, and prices are, therefore, very high. Ice, however, is still firm. This would be a good ice cream country if there were any demand, but the country is so sparsely settled that a man feels as lonesome here as a Greenbacker at a Presidential election.

Ate a pound of cotton waste soaked in machine oil, to-day. There is nothing left for to-morrow but ice-water and an old pocketbook for dinner. Looks as though we might have snow.

July 7.—This is a good cool place to spend the summer if provisions were more plenty. I am wearing a seal skin undershirt with three woolen overshirts and two bear skin vests to-day; and when the dew begins to fall I have to put on my buffalo ulster to keep off the night air. I wish I was home. It seems pretty lonesome here since the other boys died. I do not know what I will get for dinner to-morrow, unless the neighbors bring in something. A big bear is coming down the hatchway as I write. I wish I could eat him. It would be the first square meal in two months. It is, however, a little mixed whether I will eat him or he eat me. It will be a cold day for me if he —— ——"

* * * * * *

Here the diary breaks off abruptly, and from the chewed up appearance of the book we are led to entertain a horrible fear as to his safety.

An Array of Facts.

Cairo, N. Y.—Charles Hoffman, of this place, says: "I have used for a year or more Baxter's Mandrake Bitters and find they have been very beneficial to me, in fact cured me of Dyspepsia in its worst form." Isaac Hoffman and Frank Rennie have also been cured of Sick Headache and Dyspepsia by their use. Westel Salsbury says they have been used by himself and family to great advantage; have cured his daughter of Sick Headache. The Bitters seem to be just the medicine for the diseases for which they are recommended.

It Was the Lemon,

A man recently fell down on Warren street. He was a large individual, and took up lots of the sidewalk, and a bystander thought it the proper time to be funny.

"How did you come to fall?" he inquired. "On a bit of lemon—"

"Yes, sir; on a bit of lemon," replied the corpulent one.

"But I see no lemon," replied the funny man.

"Well, who said you could?" savagely roared the large individual as he got up and dusted himself off with his handkerchief; "Can any one see the lemon in half-a-dozen coktails, say?"—Puck.

A Papoose Killed by Mosquitoes.

In Alida Valley, Nevada, a couple of weeks ago, a small band of Indians was camping near some willows where the mosquitoes were very numerous. A squaw left her papoose in the shade while she played Piute poker with her companions. The game was rather high, and became so interesting that she forgot her unfortunate offspring for several hours. When her attention was again directed to the child she discovered that it had been almost eaten up by mosquitoes. They had collected on the little thing in such numbers that its face and arms were completely raw from their attacks. So many had bitten the baby that it died next day from the effects of the poison.

They Were Once.

This was in a horse-car. Two elderly gentlemen seated on one side, and another ditto on the other.

"Excuse me," said the latter, "but are you, gentlemen, natives of New Haven?"

"No, sir, no," replied one of the persons addressed.

"Ah, I didn't know, gentlemen," said the questioner.

"We were formerly natives," said the other of the two, "but we are now living in Philadelphia."

Quite a smile all over the car.—New Haven Register.

God Bless the Women!

The best interests of all humanity depend on the good health of our women folk. Woman's best friend for relieving the painful weaknesses with which so many are afflicted, and as a general family medicine for warding off bilious attacks and curing stomach, liver and kidney complaints, is Brown's Iron Bitters. It contains just such life-giving properties as are needed in female diseases, and is superior to all other preparations as a true medical tonic for giving health, strength and vigor to every part of the body. If you are weak, nervous and debilitated, or suffering from dyspepsia, Brown's Iron Bitters will surely cure you.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

It is stated at the treasury department that one of the incoming collectors of internal revenue is so superstitious that he objected to taking possession of his office on the 1st prox., because the date fell on Friday.

Secretary Lincoln, Senator Conger and Generals Sherman and Drum had a long consultation over the proposed removal of Sturgis from the command of the Soldiers' Home here. It is now generally understood that the commissioners will reverse their action.

Public Printer Rounds will make a desperate effort this year to get the hundreds of thousands of copies of the annual report of the Commissioner of Agriculture out on time. There has been much complaint over the delays of the printing officers this respect in the past. Sometimes the reports having been printed for two or three years after they were issued.

The Postoffice Commission has returned to the city from their tour of inspection of the principal postoffices throughout the country. They will submit a report on their labors in a few days. It is not known that any startling irregularities were discovered, but it is said some radical reforms will be recommended. Generally, however, it is understood that the examination found everything in good order.

It is believed that when the expenditures and receipts of the Postoffice Department for the past fiscal year are obtained, which will not be before the end of the present quarter, it will be ascertained that there remains a surplus of receipts over expenditures sufficient to warrant the Postmaster General in recommending Congress in his annual report to reduce the rate on postage. The plan most favored is to cut down the rate on letters to 2 cents, and at the same time the weight allowed for newspapers will be increased. Another change likely to be made in future will be the introduction of stamped letter sheets combining envelope and letter sheets.

SILVER COINAGE.

The acting treasurer, Wyman, has given instruction for the transfer to the mint at Philadelphia for recoinage of all the uncurrent subsidiary silver held at the different depositories throughout the country.—There are about 500,000 of these coins at various offices, including 3-cent, 5-cent, and 20-cent silver pieces, and other uncurrent silver.

CLEANING THE WHITE HOUSE CHANDELIERS.

The most delicate and laborious part of the house-cleaning now going on at the white house is the cleaning of the three huge crystal and silver chandeliers which light the east room. Each of them contains about six thousand separate pieces of glass, which one by one are being cleaned and polished by hand. The work has been intrusted to four skilled mechanics, and will occupy about two weeks.

GEN. SHERMAN.

Gen. Wm. T. Sherman will ask to be placed on the retired list of the army in November, 1883. He would be retired under the army compulsory act in Feb. 8, 1884. Gen. Sherman states he has made up his mind to retire from active service in the fall of next year, instead of waiting for an enforcement of the law, so as to give his successor in command of the army, Lieut. Gen. Sheridan, an opportunity of expressing to the next congress such views as he may have looking to the best interests of the service. Gen. Sherman will make his home in St. Louis.

PENSIONS.

Heretofore the practice of the pension office has been to assign a certain number of cases to each clerk to work up. In case where this clerk has been discharged from the office, his cases often about half completed, have been set aside and allowed to get moldy, being allowed to rest often from one to five years. Commissioner Dudley has directed that this practice be stopped, and the uncompleted cases of one clerk, in case of his removal or absence from any cause, be immediately assigned to other desks, and the necessary work on them continued to completion.

GUITEAU'S SKELETON.

Guiteau's skeleton is now at the national army medical museum in this city, but will not be exhibited to the public. The final disposition of the bones of the assassin has not yet been determined upon and can not be until Judge Hagner decides as to the validity of Guiteau's will, in which he bequeathed his body to Dr. Hicks. The experts who were engaged in the microscopical examination of Guiteau's brain have completed their work. It is understood they already disagree in their conclusions respecting his sanity, and there will probably be two reports rendered.

SECRETARY TELLER.

At the interior department it is an open secret that Secretary Teller expects to be returned to his old seat in the senate, and that in consequence a change in the secretaryship may be expected. When Mr. Teller left here he expected to return about Sept. 1, but it is now announced that he will not return before the end of the month. The convention which chooses a successor to himself to fill his unexpired term meets on the 14th, and he will remain until he sees the result. His friends here say that the people of the state are determined to have him in the senate again, and that he will accede to the popular will.

FRAUDS ON THE INDIAN DEPARTMENT.

Inspector Pollock, of the Indian department, who has been visiting the Shoshone and Bannock reservations, sends to the department as a specimen of the contractor's work furnished the agencies an enormous horseshoe weighing something over three pounds. The shoe was 8½ inches in length and 6¼ inches broad, and would be altogether too large for even a Percheron-Norman stallion of the largest breed. In the contract these shoes are furnished ostensibly for Indian ponies, a breed of horses with not overly large feet. As the shoes are furnished by the pound, it is evident that the contractor finds it much more profitable to furnish these large shoes than the smaller sizes, which would require the same amount of iron to be worked up into two or three shoes.

SHERMAN ON WOLSELEY.

Gen. Sherman, on being interrogated in regard to the news from the east, said that Sir Garnet Wolseley is not only a soldier of great ability, but that his late movement upon Ismailia was equal to a thing of a similar character undertaken by the first Napoleon. It will be remembered that Gen. Sherman, not many years since, visited the scene of the present hostilities in Egypt, is feetly familiar with the theater of operations, and during our civil war had a great deal of experience in flank movements. He says that Wolseley showed great nerve in taking the sacred bull by the horns, so to speak, without waiting for the result of negotiations at Constantinople. "Ah, he is a great soldier, that Wolseley," said the general enthusiastically, "a great soldier. The English people will pay him well, and he knows it."

One Moment, Please.

Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" will do this for you. Get a bottle now and begin using it at once. A long fit of sickness and a long doctor's bill may be the penalty of neglect. SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIGG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—His Subsequent Removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craigg was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster county, N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craigg that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craigg demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go back to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craigg with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's great success as a Surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

MALARIA!

THE ONLY REMEDY KNOWN TO DESTROY THIS DEADLY PEST.

The most alarming fact, in our sanitary conditions, is the prevalence of MALARIA POISON not only in marshy, low-lying districts, but in the cities and upon elevated grounds, where a few years since, it was unheard of. Frequently fatal disorders of the digestive functions, wasted and enfeebled body and even insanity are the dire effects of malarial poisoning, the sure precursors of if the poison is not neuterialized. The boatmen on the Delaware and Hudson Canal, as well as the inhabitants of the adjoining country, have been great sufferers from MALARIA. Not until a few years past did they find a reliable remedy. Now thousands testify that there is but one real and speedy cure for malarial poisoning and that is DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY," which by its action upon the blood purifies it and restores a healthy tone to the entire system. As a preventive in localities where this danger lurks, it is invaluable. The "FAVORITE REMEDY" also cures the worst liver and kidney complaints and all diseases caused by vitiated blood. For sale by all druggists, price $1.00. It is an absolutely safe, purely vegetable remedy, the greatest alterative medicine in the world. Address the proprietor, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Chas. Underwood moved to his residence on North street Wednesday. He will be a welcome neighbor.

Mr. Fuller's lecture Sunday evening was well attended and gave good satisfaction.

Rev. Jesse Kilpatrick returned from conference Tuesday evening. He pronounced it one of the best he ever attended, and he has been in attendance for twenty-seven years. His return is received with satisfaction.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

PORTER BEAL, of Rollin, will market 500 bushels of peaches this year.

Adrian Press: Capt. Bowen's old grey horse, Frank, that he rode during the war, and which has been a faithful friend ever since, died this week, and the chief engineer feels as though an old friend had left him.

HUDSON is at work to get a telephone line to Adrian. One-half the necessary amount of scrip is already taken and the balance will undoubtedly be worked up this week. Hudson will not be behind her sister towns in a public improvement of this kind.

Hudson Post: The new railroad north of the lakes will place our friend Beardsell in the heart of the pleasure seeking world east and west of him. With a depot at the north end of the lake, the steamer "City of Hudson" will make connection with all trains.

Hudson Post: The new railroad through the neighboring town of Addison is said to be quite a sure thing, yet they hold their breath when they speak of it, the cup having been put to their lips so many times and then dashed to the ground before they took in water enough to get up steam.

Hudson Post: The night watch imagined it was a phantom horse bearing down on him without any driver, in the dead hours of Friday night, but he stopped it all the same, and it was all explained by the breathless arrival of a young man and a number of friends on the trail, that had followed the animal from Piety hill where, while his master minded not the fleeting hours with his anamorata within, he had broken loose and started for fresh pastures at home.

Hudson Gazette: Canandalgua came nigh having a blaze last Saturday evening. Somebody raised a window in David Fink's house and set fire to the clothing in the wardrobe. The fire was discovered before it had made serious headway—but considerable clothing was destroyed and the room damaged by fire, and other parts of the house by smoke. It was, beyond doubt, the work of an incendiary. The tracks of some person were plainly discernable under the window of the room in which the fire was kindled.

Clinton News: The first telephone put in in Clinton was at J. S. Kies' house and the privilege of sending the first message after the workmen had the line in working order was very appropriately accorded to Mrs. Parks mother of Mrs. J. S. Kies, an old lady 87 years old. With feeble and trembling voice the words of greeting went over the line to her grandson, George Kies, in Tecumseh, who could easily distinguish the voice of the old lady. Thus did the closing generation give greeting to the modern.

Hudson Gazette; George Camp's horse never did love the cars, and yesterday afternoon it improved an occasion for manifesting its dislike for th "scream of whistle and sound of gong" by running away on R. R. street, with Mr. C.'s son at the ribbons. The driver was forced to relinquish his hold on the reins quite unexpectedly at the Market street corner, where the vehicle turned over, throwing him out with fearful force on the railroad grounds, he receiving some severe bruises. The horse was halted before Dick Brown's residence. A person who saw the accident says young camp seemed to bound up ten feet so great was the momentum with which he landed from the carriage.

THE FIRST DISTRICT.

The Republican Convention—Dr. George Howell, of Macon, the Nominee.

The Republican Convention of the First Representative District was held at Blissfield on Saturday last.

The convention was called to order, in Carpenter's hall, at 2 o'clock, by W. B. Hill, of Palmyra, chairman of the district committee, and Hon. G. P. Waring, of Ridgeway, was called to the chair.

On taking the chair Mr. Waring made a few remarks, thanking the convention for the honor conferred upon him. As its representative in the state legislature, he knew the district well, and stated that the choice of the convention would be the people's choice at the polls.

A. C. Bartholomew, of Blissfield, was chosen secretary.

A committee of three on credentials was appointed as follows: Dr. R. B. House, Tecumseh; Cyrus Mead, Macon; J. E. Jacklin, Palmyra.

The committee on credentials reported a full list of delegates present.

The convention then proceeded to take an informal ballot for representative.

John Boyd, of Macon, on behalf of the entire delegation from that town, briefly presented the name of Dr. Geo. Howell, of Macon, as a candidate, and eulogized him highly.

Cyrus Crandall, of Raisin, on behalf of his whole delegation, presented the name of James Cook in a short but decisive speech. Mr. Cook was eulogized as a thorough-going republican, a business man and a soldier.

Blissfield, Clinton, Deerfield and a majority of Ridgeway supported Mr. Howell.

The informal ballot resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes	80
George Howell	37
James Cook	23

On motion the nomination of Dr. Howell was made unanimous. The following district committee was appointed:

Blissfield—M. H. Coggswell.
Clinton—E. W. Frieze.
Deerfield—O. A. Hawkins,
Macon—I. S. Osborn.
Ogden—E. J. Hodges.
Palmyra—Jas. Jacklin.
Riga—A. H. Van Pelt.
Ridgeway—Frank J. Tuttle.
Raisin—Cyrus Crandall.
Tecumseh—R. B. House.

The two candidates then addressed the assembly in short speeches and the convention adjourned.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

Most of the Present Incumbents Re-Nominated.

The Republicans held their County Convention at Adrian last Monday. Delegates were present from all the towns, and the business of the convention was expeditiously and harmoniously got along with.

The assembly was called to order by A. W. Smith, Chairman of the County Committee.

A. H. Briggs was called to the chair and M. T. Cole was chosen secretary.

The committee on credentials reported a list of the delegates, and the convention adjourned until after dinner.

Upon reassembling Judge Howell was elected permanent chairman, and W. B. Hill, permanent secretary.

The convention then proceeded to the nomination of a county ticket.

A ballot was ordered for Senator with the following result:

Whole number of votes	161
Brackley Shaw	89
G. B. Horton	27
R. B. House	25
Manson Carpenter	19
Charles C. Morse	1

Mr. Shaw, having received a majority of all the votes, was declared the nominee.

For Sheriff, Chas. Bidwell was renominated by acclamation.

T. M. Hunter, for Clerk, and A. A. Dolbear, for Register, were similarly nominated.

On treasurer there was quite a contest, and three ballots were taken, as follows:

FIRST BALLOT.

Whole number of votes	161
C. P. Nash	57
J. Hoag	58
S. B. Mann	26
G. W. Fleming	20

SECOND BALLOT.

Whole number of votes	162
S. B. Mann	37
C. P. Nash	56
Jay Hoag	49
G. W. Fleming	20

THIRD BALLOT.

Whole number of votes	163
Jay Hoag	89
C. P. Nash	63
G. W. Fleming	11

R. A. Watts was nominated for prosecuting attorney, Geo. W. Whitbeck and F. R. Payne for commissioners, H. H. Seaver and Dr. Dayton Parker for coroners, and James Blair for county surveyor, all by acclamation.

An effort was made to change the basis of representation, but the motion failed to carry, and the convention then adjourned.

A HAPPY SURPRISE

On the Elder and Mrs. Sink, of the East Ridgeway Christian Church, Who Are About to Leave.

The Rev. C. C. Sink and family, who have lived in the parsonage of the East Ridgeway Christian Church for the past year, and he at the same time filling the pulpit of that church, were very happily surprised on Tuesday evening of this week. Early in the evening (unexpected to the elder's family) the neighbors and members of church began to put in a mysterious appearance, and continued so to do until the lively little number of about forty were gathered in. The jovial pastor (of course we all know he is jovial) had occasion, and took privilege of remarking what a great surprise it was on him, and also how very much he enjoyed such occasions, and, of course, always telling some of his laughable stories. After the crowd seemed to be all gathered in, Mr. Geo. L. Oliver, with appropriate remarks, presented a set of dishes in behalf of those present to the elder and his wife. The offering of this unexpected gift seemed to almost overcome the elder to a certain degree in his remarks of acceptance of the gift. After the elder kindly accepted the gift, with thanks, a prayer was offered to God, and then came the preparations for the substantial part of the evening. While this was being done, the elder, in his comical way, read some original poetry entitled, first, "The fly as a pest," and second, "When a feller fells de best," both of which were very comical and interesting to the crowd. After listening to some music by Miss Libbie Thackeray and others, the crowd was delighted by the announcement of a bountiful repast being in waiting for them, to which they did justice and to which your humble servant, the writer, can testify to the partaking thereof also. Supper being over and the crowd having altogether a very nice time, and a time long to be remembered, they each one departed for their respective homes. May the elder and wife live to see many such happy gatherings, and may the field of labor to which he is sent to work be blessed by his influence from God.

Adrian Press: Felts Brothers are engaged in drying apples at their factory in Blissfield. They have a drying capacity of 500 bushels of apples per day, and at present can get only about a quarter of that amount. They have 18 hands employed at present and will increase the force as fast as the crop ripens. The apples are peeled and cored, and the cores and peelings are also dried and shipped to Chicago to a manufacturer of wines and champagnes. Thus nothing is lost to the producer, as the worms are dried up with the cores "free gratis."

Prize Essays on Southern Gardening.

Last spring Messrs. Hiram Sibley & Co., the Rochester and Chicago seed men, offered $500 for essays on gardening in the Southern states, in the interest of their numerous customers in that section. The award of prizes has already been made as follows:

A. Oehler, of Chatham county, Ga., the $100 prize for the best essay on "Cabbage Growing in the South."

L. J. Woodhead, of Hamilton county, Tenn., $100 prize on "Onion Culture, South."

W. A. Grant, of Harris county, Texas, $50 prize for best essay on "Tomato Growing."

J. C. Smith, Fannin county, Texas, first prize $25, on "Turnips for the South.

A portion of the remainder of the prize money offered will be paid to the other competitors who furnished valuable information. The essays are practical and well written, and will prove of great value to southern gardeners, and be a considerable factor in the already rapid growth of southern gardening. They are to be published by Sibley's Farmers' Almanac for 1883, now in preparation.

Fever and Ague.

Are you troubled with Ague, Chills and Fever, Bilious Fever, Remittent or Intermitting Fever, Night Sweats or any disease that comes from Malaria or disordered Liver and Hot Suns? If so, procure a bottle of Green's Ague Conqueror, which is an acetic extract of strong tonic roots, combined with Sulphate Magnesia, etc., and positively contains no Quinine, Arsenic or other poisons. It purifies the blood, cleanses the liver, spleen and other secretive organs so effectually that the chills will not return. We have never found any case of Fever and Ague it will not cure. Price 50 cents and $1.00 per bottle. One large bottle has cured as many as five in one family. Sold by all druggists and dealers everywhere.

Interesting History.

The very beautiful and wonderfully cheap edition of "Green's Large History of the English People," which is published by the Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, New York, is most deservedly finding a place in thousands of home libraries. No history is better worthy of a place in even the smallest library, and, though formerly published by the Harper's at $10, it is now easily within the reach of anyone, the price varying in the several forms from $1.50 in one vol., octavo, cloth binding, to $2.50 in 5 vols. Elzevir edition, half Russia binding. It also forms a part of the Cyclopedia of History which is published by the same house.

The Brightest Intellects Suffer Most.

Young men who have led a life of excess and dissipation, reform! Give tone to the stomach, regulate the liver and bowels, strengthen the urinary organs, relieve those dull pains in the limbs, rid yourself of that feeling of nausea, biliousness, languor and nervous debility; give tone and strength to each organic function, by using Brown's Iron Bitters; then will you experience a genial warmth and awakening life in place of that dead feeling of decay; and dyspepsia, milky urine, etc., no longer undermine your constitution. Delay is dangerous.

Hudson Gazette: Hillsdale is negotiating to connect herself, telephonically, with Coldwater, and it is generally understood, in fact the manager of the Hillsdale exchange has said, that after the state line is extended from Adrian to Hudson, that Hillsdale would build a line to connect with us.

Brace Up.

There is serious meaning in this expression. That wearied step, languid eye, and general feeling of lassitude come from "sickness." Be assured, a serious, and perhaps fatal disease is close in its wake. The system wants cleansing of impurities; the sluggish blood needs to be sent in swift and clear currents through the veins. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" will do this; it will give new vigor to the body, brightness to the eye, a glow to the countenance, and elasticity to the step. One Dollar a bottle. Every druggist has it. Dr. David Kennedy, proprietor, Rondout, N. Y.

William Brown, of Oregon

BY JOAQUIN MILLER.

But she, her name was Jane, alas,
The squire's daughter; and to reign
The belle from Her-she-be-to Dan,
Her little game. How lovers rash
Go smitten at the sparkling eyes!
How many a maple, tight or loose footed
Wrote rhymes and sighed and dyed—mustache!
The hired man hall loved her long,
Had loved her best and first and last;
Her very garments as she passed
For him, had symphony and song.
So when one day with brow afrown
She called him "Bill," he raised his hand,
He caught her eye and faltering said,
"I love you; and my name is Brown."
She fairly waltzed with rage; she wept;
You would have thought the house on fire.
She told her sire, the portly squire,
Then smelt her smelling-salts and slept.
Poor William did what could be done;
He swung a pistol on each hip,
He gathered up a great ox whip
And drove toward the setting sun.
He crossed the great back bone of earth
He saw the snowy mountains rolled
Like mighty billows; saw the gold
Of awful sunsets; saw the birth
Of sudden dawn upon the plain.
And every night would William Brown
Eat pork and beans, and then lie down
And dream sweet dreams of gentle Jane.

They sought for bigger game; somehow
They seemed to see above her brow
The forky sign of turkey tracks. * * *
The teter-board of life goes up
The teter-board of life goes down.
The sweetest face must learn to frown,
The biggest dog has been a pup.
O, maidens! pluck not at the air;
The sweetest flowers I have found
Grow rather close unto the ground,
And highest places are most bare.
Why you had better win the grace
Of one passessed Ar-ri-can,
Than climb, climb, climb
In love alone with his own face.
At last she nursed a new desire,
She sighed, she wept for William Brown,
She watched the splendid sun go down
Like some great sailing ship on fire.
Then rose and checked her trunk right on;
And in the cars she lunched and lunched,
And had her ticket punched, and punched,
Until she came to Oregon.
She reached the limit of the lines,
She wore blue specks upon her nose,
Wore rather short and manly clothes,
And so set out to reach the mines.
Her right hand held a Testament,
Her pocket held a parasol,
And thus equipped right on she went,
Went water-proof and water-fall.
She met a miner gazing down,
Slow stirring something with a spoon;
"O, tell me true and tell me soon,
What has become of William Brown?"
He looked askance beneath her specs,
Then stirred his cocktail round and round,
Then raised his head and sighed profound,
And said, "He's handed in his checks."
Then care fed on her damaged cheek,
And she grew faint did gallus Jane,
And smelt her smelling salts in vain.
She wandered on weary, worn and weak,
At last upon a hill alone
She came, and there she sat her down;
For on that hill there stood a stone,
And, lo! that stone read, "William Brown."
"O, William Brown! O, William Brown!
And here you rest at last," she said,
"With this lone stone above your head,
And forty miles from any town!
I will plant cypress trees, I will,
And I will build a fence around,
And I will fertilize the ground
With tears enough to turn a mill."
She went and got a hired man,
She brought him forty miles from town,
And in the tall grass squatted down
And bade him hurry as she should plan.
But savage cow-boys with their bands
They saw, and hurried they ran
And told a bearded cattle man
Somebody loitered on his lands.
He took his rifle from the rack,
He got himself in battle pelt,
He stuck two pistols in his belt
And, mounting on his horse's back,
He plunged ahead. But when they shewed
A woman fair, about his eyes
He pulled his hat, and he threw so
Pulled at his beard and chewed and chewed.
At last he put him down and spoke:
"O, lady dear, what do you here?"
"I found a tomb unto my dear,
I plant sweet flowers for his sake."
The bearded man threw his two hands
Above his head, then brought them down
And cried, "Oh, I am William Brown,
And this is the corner-stone of my lands!"
Her speech fell off, her head fell back,
Just like some stiffed ten-pot lid;
She so reasoned, this ancient maiden did,
And, fainting, split herself, in fact.
Right in the hand of William Brown,
Then all the Indians were amazed;
They brought this gentle maiden crazed,
And circling round they squatted down.
But William was a gentle man;
He bade two Indians call the priest,
He bade two more prepare a feast,
Then led her, blushing, by the hand.
Like some sweet maiden in sweet May,
He was so good, he was so true,
He did not know what else to do,
But led her round and round all day.
At last the priest, on spotted mare
Who galloped forty miles or more,
He found them in the grasses sore
And married them right then and there.
Then all the cow-boys they came down
And feasted as the night advanced,
And all the diggers drank and danced,
And cried, "Big Injin, William Brown!"

A LONG PARTING.

"How handsome he is," thinks Daisy, as she leans over the rustic fence watching the mower as with long sweeps of his sythe he cuts down the swaths of grass. "I really believe that a man looks better in the roughest of clothes than in those stiff immaculate garments they call 'dress-suits'—that is if he is good-looking at all."

It is only this morning that Daisy has come to the country, to revel in its bracing air for the first time in her young life.

"Where are your roses, pet?" her father had asked her one day, a few weeks before, waking from his business plans to notice the pale listless look of his child.

"I think I want quiet papa. I am tired of dressing, calling, and parties. Papa, may I not go to the country—to my old nurse's—instead of to the Branch this summer?"

And Mr. Nelson had answered yes.

"I would like to come with you, but business will not allow of it. So, enjoy yourself all you can, my pet, and write me very often."

And with these words, kissing her affectionately, he had left her in Farmer Shear's care, who was waiting her arrival at the small station. Farmer Shear's wife had been Daisy's foster-mother, caring for her ever since her mother on her death-bed, calling her weeping housekeeper to her, and laying her child in her arms, had said:

"You have served me faithfully, Susan, and I know you will be kind to my baby."

And well that trust had been fulfilled. The first great grief Daisy had ever experienced had come to her when, two years before our story opens, her kind nurse had left her for a home of her own, offered her by a worthy farmer, who recognized in her just the sensible qualities his farm needed in a mistress.

It is two o'clock; dinner has been over a couple of hours, and since then Daisy has been luxuriating in the wild flowers and thousand and one delights new to her city-bred eyes. For the past ten minutes she has been watching the mower at his work. She knows that he is Farmer Shear's nephew, for she met him at dinner; but she only gave him the most casual observation then, and now she notices, for the first time, how more than average ly fine-looking he is.

She thinks herself unseen; but she is not, for a pair of amused dark eyes are watching her furtively as she peeps through the only partially concealing screen of wild-rose vines that trail about her feet, and clambering upward, fling [illegible] making a charming frame for a charming picture. A great red lily lifts its tinted chalice in the centre of the meadow; the sunlight touches it and makes it such a thing of beauty that Daisy longs to possess it. But the scythe with its measured strokes is nearing its slender stem.

"Oh don't!"

The exclamation is involuntary, and Daisy flushes crimson as the mower glances up as if just conscious of her presence.

"The lily," she says, in answer to his questioning look. "I thought you were going to cut it down, and it is so pretty."

"Permit me."

It is the action of a moment to pluck it and present it to her, and, as he does so, Daisy wonders as much at the young man's easy unembarrassed manner and refined tones as she did at the comeliness and grace of his approaches.

That was how it began the summer idyl that was destined to have such an abrupt ending. Both young, both impulsive, what wonder that the more these two saw of each other the stronger grew the charm that drew them together.

Mrs. Shears looked on unsuspiciously: it pleased her genial heart to see "the children," as she called them, enjoying themselves; and so the summer hours flew all too swiftly by. At length came a day when, all through an accident in which, by the falling of a tree, Steven Haughton nearly lost his life, the thin veil which the saucy boy-god had been rearing, called friendship, fell aside and his true face became disclosed, and with a sense almost of fear, Daisy awoke, as from a dream, to see whither she had been drifting.

"Can it really be that I care for him—this young farmer whom a few months ago I did not know?"

Then she questioned her heart, and its answer came quickly:

"Ah yes, I do! I do!"

And Steven, lying in his room with his broken arm in a sling, felt happier than a king. Never to his dying day would he forget the look of anguish that he had read in the lovely face his eyes had rested upon when they had opened from the unconsciousness that the dreadful stunning blow had brought.

"She loves me!" he thought triumphantly; "and before long, please God, I shall hear her sweet lips say so."

But it was not to be, for it so happened that the young man had just arisen from his bed of pain and resumed the role of a convalescent, when Mr. Nelson came to spend a few days with his daughter. It was but a short time before, with a keenness of vision for which he congratulated himself, he saw how matters were. He noticed how the blood rushed to the young man's pale cheeks whenever Daisy addressed him, and how an answering light sprung into the maiden's blue eyes.

"This will never do," he thought to himself, in positive alarm. "My Daisy a farmer's wife—or rather drudge? The idea is preposterous! How foolish I was ever to allow the child away from me. But after all it is not beyond remedy. He has not spoken to her, I know, for she would have told me. I will take her home at once. Once away from his society the danger will be over."

Poor little Daisy! She acquiesces unquestioningly to her father's sudden mandate of departure, as what else can she do? She well knows what the feeling is that throbs with her every pulse for Steven, but though his admiration has been plainly evidenced, no words of love have been spoken, and when she sees how quietly, almost coldly, he answers her farewell, her warm young heart chills. And the years pass, and yet it does not awake from that chill.

In vain does her anxious father, inwardly remorseful for what he recognizes as his own doing, gratify, before it is spoken, every desire; nothing brings back the old happy girlish animation.

At length they go away, Mr. Nelson fondly hoping great results from the change of scene and surroundings.

They are in London, when one evening Mr. Nelson urges his daughter to accompany him to hear a noted lecturer.

"I do not care much to go, papa, but to please you I will," Daisy answers.

And before long, leaning upon her father's arm, she enters the thronged hall.

Their tickets entitle them to seats in one of the foremost rows, and thither the usher takes them.

The lecture begins even as they enter.

What is it that causes Daisy to start and tremble? As the deep rich tones of the orator fall upon her ear they bring with vivid force that summer five years ago, when all unasked and unsought her girlish heart went out of her keeping for ever. With an effort she controls herself and raises her eyes to the platform. Her ears have not deceived her. She sees a tall manly figure, whose handsome features, eloquent with power and talent, are those of the never-forgotten hero of her fancy.

At the same moment, looking down, his gaze meets full her own.

Never before did the great question upon which he is treating get as ably handled.

"Our favorite orator surpassed himself," so says the voice of the press the following day.

It does not tell, for it does not know, what it was that lent such more than usual fire and vigor to the speaker's utterances; but we who are behind the scenes can say that it was the radiant expression of surprised gladness that looked out of Daisy's blue orbs.

As Mr. Nelson and his daughter issue from the hall, some one comes towards Daisy with outstretched hand, and the exclamation:

"How glad I am to see you, Miss Nelson! It is an unexpected, and therefore all the more welcome surprise. I read your familiar name amongst the list of arrivals published in the papers, but I did not know whether it were really my old friend or not."

The bright color bathes Daisy's face at the unaffected pleasure in his tones, and she answers frankly and simply, as she places her small gloved hand in his:

"I, too, am very glad to meet you." Then, turning to her father, who by this time has recognized to his infinite wonderment in the celebrated orator the young man he met five years ago in the country, she says: "Papa, this is Mr. Haughton—you surely remember him."

After that every evening that Mr. [illegible] allow him to call his own finds him at Daisy's side, and after a little everything is explained, and she learns how it was that he had allowed her, though loving her passionately, to go out of his life without a word or question, and how he, whom her father had looked upon as a detrimental, was in reality heir to a large fortune, and even then engaged in the scientific pursuits which afterward made his name noted. His health for the time having suffered from over application to study, he had come to his uncle's—his mother's brother's—to recruit, knowing the benefit fresh air and outdoor exercise does both to the brain and body.

A month goes by, and one afternoon Mr. Nelson concludes an all-important conversation by saying:

"I hope, Mr. Haughton, that now you are to be my son-in-law, you will let bygones be bygones, and bear me no malice for the past. I thought I was acting for the best [illegible] all, and I considered you not a desirable match for her. I trust you will pardon me for my frankness when I assure you how proudly and gladly I now resign her to you. When I intimated to you that there was another suitor in the case I did deceive you in the word—only in the letter—for there was one, rich, and with fine prospects, who for some time had looked upon Daisy with the same feelings as yourself; though the truth was, and I knew it, she regarded him with utter indifference."

Steven took the old gentleman's proffered hand.

"I can certainly condone the past," he answered, "in view of the joyous future which you have opened before me in giving me the right to woo for my own your dear daughter."

And so, not long after, the merry bells ring out, and the sun, streaming through the stained-glass church-windows, falls like a radiant benediction upon the bowed heads of Steven Haughton and his newly-made bride.

And their prospect is of the happiest; for the love that could keep true, "though lost to sight," for five long years, will surely never falter through the varied experiences of the wedded existence whose fairy portals they are so hopefully and trustingly entering.

Avenged.

"Stop that horse-car."

It was a balmy afternoon in August, all the world seemed wrapped in a mantle of loveliness. The wind was sighing through lawn and garden in a drowsy fashion, and the flowers that lined the graveled walks of Boastcliff Castle seemed to be beckoning with loving hands to the Lady Esmerelda as she sat in a graceful poise on a velvet-covered fauteuil and gazed in a languid, dreamy, no-washing-to-be-done-for-three-days manner upon the pageant of nature that was passing before her eyes.

But when the voice of one she knew, one she had loved with a deathless tenderness in the halcyon days gone by, came floating to her on the scented breath of the morning, a thrill passed through her, and the eyes, erstwhile so listless, gleamed with the baleful fires of revenge. Looking eagerly across the croquet-ground she saw Pizarro McGinness, the man who had scorned her love, coming across lots on a run, while far in advance, and now almost opposit Coastcliff Castle, was a horse-car. The girl smiled grimly to herself.

"Stop that car," shouted Pizarro again.

The smile had faded from the pretty face now, but no look of pity took its place. "Divil a stop will he get from me," she murmured, and went into the house.

In a few moments there was a rap at the door. Esmerelda answered it, and found Pizarro there.

"You have blighted my life, false woman," he said. "I had a job way out on Blue Island avenue, and now I shall lose it because you would not stop the car."

"Do you mean this?" asked the girl, kicking the dog off the front steps as she spoke.

"Yes," replied the man, "you have utterly blasted all my prospects."

"Then," said Esmerelda, a look of holy calm and peaceful joy stealing over her face, "the Mulcaheys are avenged."

Sheep and Improved Farming.

Sheep have played a most important part in the improvement of the soil in all civilized countries. At an early period, sheep were kept mostly for their wool in all countries; but as populations increased, and greater demand was made upon the soil to furnish food, mutton became the principal object of sheep farming, and wool the incident. During this transition state, skillful breeders made a long, careful, and practical study in improving the carcass and its early maturity. Instead of keeping sheep to their full age as breeders and producers of wool, the most persevering effort was made to mature them for a profitable market at the earliest date. This was done by judicious selections in breeding, and the most generous feeding. The sheep, like other animals, was found plastic in the hands of a skillful breeder and feeder. It was soon found that the improved Southdown and Cotswold could be fitted for the most profitable market at from six to fifteen months old, except those required for breeders, and these were most profitably turned at four to five years old, instead of at seven or ten years.

The consumption of mutton is increasing in this country, especially in our large cities, and it has become profitable to supply this demand. It is profitable, first, because the price is remunerative, and secondly, because it is promotive of good husbandry—the improvement of the soil.—National Live-Stock Journal.

Mr. Reuben Jasson's house in London, England, is one whose details display æsthetic originality. He has a bath room built like an arbor that spouts water on every side at the touch of a spring, and three lifts transport the inhabitants of the house to the upper stories. The stable is built on the roof, and eighteen or twenty horses are quartered there.

Some Bang-up Stories.

A Georgia negro, while fishing, fastened his line to his leg for safety. He was soon seen to go overboard, and when his body and the fish were recovered it took the Coroner two days to determine whether the negro drowned the fish or the fish drowned the negro.

In Bayou Chicot, La., a full-grown wild-cat leaped upon Mrs. Griffith Thompson, fastening his teeth in her left arm. She grasped the savage beast by the throat and held it until it was choked to death, although it was biting and scratching her all the time.

A small red squirrel attempted to jump from one tree to another as Wm. Miles, of New Chester, Pa., drew on him. The squirrel fell into the Brandywine. It hardly touched the water when several bass came to the surface, and, pulling the squirrel under, drowned it.

Silas Hutchinson, of Pocopsin Township, Pa., relates as a fact that he saw one of his cows come up suddenly out of the Brandywine, where she had gone to cool, and as she ascended the river [illegible] inch es long hung to one of her teats. Finding itself out of water it let go and wiggled back into the stream.

A big pickerel, hooked by J. F. Winthron, of Hydetown, Pa., lay so quiet that it was a query with him whether he had a fish or a snag. After trying to worry it without success a happy thought struck him. Taking the fish-line in his teeth, he established telephonic communication, and yelling "Hello!" at the top of his lungs, the fish darted like a shot, and was so active that it was with difficulty secured. It weighed five pounds.

A Wyoming man saw a Texas steer standing on the railroad track, and knowing that the express train was due tried to induce the beast to move. Several pieces of board thrown at the ferocious monster failed to move it, until at last, as the train rushed down the track at lightning speed, he seized the steer by the tail and twisted it like a wet towel. At this moment the train struck them both and the result was stupendous. The steer was found two days afterward browsing peacefully in a corn field, with two driving wheels hung on its horns. No trace of either the man or the engine has been heard of since.

The bossest snake story we ever heard of has just come to light in Twiggs, as follows: A few days since, while a certain farmer was cleaning out his fence corners, a huge rattle-snake struck at him, but, missing the intended victim, sunk its poisonous fangs deep into the hoe-handle which the man held in his hands. In less time than it takes to write it, the handle was swollen to such an extent that it bursted the eye of the hoe and split into a thousand pieces.—With the aid of two crowbars and an old army musket the snake was killed. The farmer skinned it, and now uses the hide for a wallet, in which he carries corn to his hogs. The "wallet" will hold three pecks and two quarts of shelled corn. Surely Twiggs deserves the belt.

A Few Words From the Horse.

Don't beat our sore sides so hard and so often, and we shall be stronger and better servants to you. You know how oppression only makes you set up your back, but you will do anything for a kind master. Don't ride and drive us about till we are ready to drop, and our wind is almost broken, and we are reeking with heat and rough usage. Pray let us have a little more water when we stand, weary and thirsty, with our poor dry tongues, unable to ask for it. You have felt the suffering of thirst. "And for pity's sake," the horse would say, "loosen this torturing bearing-rein; we toss and shake our heads, or we try to keep them still, and nothing gives us a moment's ease. You, master, would suffer severely if your head were held in such a position, and we could do more work and much better without it. Please remember that we can always hear your voice, and shall understand what you want us to do so much more quickly if you speak to us quietly, than if you roar at us, and drag our tender, worn mouths about. We get so puzzled and frightened when you are in a rage with us, that we only flounder and plunge, and make you more and more angry. Our last entreaty is, that when we get old and past our work, you will not let our poor, wasted bodies stagger along under some load, when our lives have been spent in your service, but that you will reward us by having us immediately put out of our pain.

Where Cattle Come From.

When we read of 250,000 head of cattle being driven every year from Texas to the Northern markets, and when we are assured that in 1870 as many as 560,000 were driven on foot to Colorado, Wyoming and Kansas, besides thousands shipped by steamer to New Orleans and elsewhere, we are surprised to learn that this immense drain on the herds of Texas does not perceptibly decrease the number of cattle in the State. When we visit the great ranches of Western Texas we are no longer surprised, but rather wonder that the United States hold people enough to eat and use all the cattle we see. It has been found, from careful examination of the Census Bureau reports, that to every 100 persons in the United States there is required eighty head of cattle, and that this requirement has not varied 1 per cent. in thirty years. Taking this as a basis of calculation, we find that the Northern and Eastern States have less than the requisite number, and it is to these States that the East looks for her beef supply.—From "Through Texas."

Play.

Play, you think, comes naturally to puppies, kittens, children, and all young things—yes, if they lead natural lives. But shut your kitten, for a week, up in a box, without much light or air, or even a cotton reel to roll about, and see how much it will play when it is at last set free. * * * Play is the voluntary exercise of all our faculties under a sense of freedom; where we exert ourselves because we like, and not because we must, that power is developed by exercise—and exercise only. It is, in fact, a branch of education that is very much neglected.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A Little Romance of Broadway.

Three pretty young girls from Jersey City had left the ferry boat to walk up to the elevated road, says a New York letter, and unluckily were provided with only one whalebone and silk covering for their heads. The narrow sidewalk made it almost impossible for the three to walk abreast, and consequently one of them, who was addressed as Annie, received all the drippings from the eaves of the umbrella upon her unselfish head.

A gentleman walking behind them noticed this, and tried, as unobtrusively as possible, to shelter her with his own. For a block or so she ignored the attempt, but finally was forced, in crossing the street, to accept the courtesy, which she did with an embarrassed bow. It happened that the youth had been well brought up, and understood her fear lest he should in any way take advantage of his courtesy to be impertinent, and being of a rather mischievous turn of mind, he waited until he caught her eye, as she looked slyly up, when, assuming that "far" look so often seen on the faces of the deaf and dumb, he pathetically touched his lips, and shook his head.

The girl looked so immensely relieved that he came near laughing right out; especially when announced that he was speechless she showed she wasn't by quietly observing to one of her friends,—

"Oh, Mary, isn't it too bad this handsome young man is deaf and dumb?"

Mary thought it was, and wondered how it was he ever got along in the world, and much to the amazement of this knight of the umbrella, the three proceeded to discuss him girl-fashion; and from the color of his eyes to the cut of his clothes he was fully criticised, "Annie" deciding that, as a husband, he would be sans reproche, never swearing, never scolding, making silence golden.

When they reached the station the three girls bowed and smiled and grimaced their gratitude, when, to their profound horror, the youth, with a sweet smile, raised his hat, remarking, with painful distinctness, that he "was very happy to have been of service." With a suppressed shriek, the merry maids rushed up the winding stairs, and the youth walked on, whistling "Beautiful Is-a-bellar."

Late Tests With Improved Gatlings.

Thorough test trials have been in progress at Sandy Hook with Dr. Gatling improved guns, before the United States Ordnance Board, for the past two weeks. These trials, which have been eminently successful, may be prolonged for another week. Dr. Gatling was present during the first ten days. The new feed allows the musket-caliber Gatling to be fired at any degree of elevation. The penetration at 3,000 yards was through one and a half inches of timber, and at 2,500 yards (giving the gun 56 degrees elevation), the bullets struck the targets (which were composed of boards lying flat on the ground) passing through two one-inch boards penetrating the sand four inches. At 2,000 yards—66½ elevation—the bullets passed through two one-inch boards and five or six inches in the sand. In every case the bullets struck the targets point on and retained their rotary motion. This was proved by the spiral scratches on the balls after they had passed through the boards. The gun is now being tried at shorter ranges.—These experiments have established the fact that a Gatling gun fired at various elevations can kill men in entrenched positions at all ranges from 100 to 3,500 yards. The elevation required for different distances is determined by a quadrant and noted. As the gun remains quite steady while being fired, the bullets can be made to drop at the point desired. The value of such a weapon of warfare is unquestioned. Dr. Gatling's new torpedo, one-barreled gun was also fired and worked well, making excellent targets at one mile range.—Army and Navy Journal

Cleanliness Next to Godliness.

Mrs. Colonel Percy Yerger, one of the most fashionable ladies in Austin, ordered Matilda, her servant, to bring in a pitcher of iced lemonade and some cake for some ladies who had called. Matilda brought the pitcher in one hand and the cake in the other, instead of bringing the cake on a plate.

"Matilda, did you wash your hands before you took hold of that cake?" asked Mrs. Yerger, looking sharply at Matilda.

"Yes, mum."

"Are you sure you washed your hands?"

"Yes, mum; I washed my hands on de lumps ob ice I put in de lemonade."

This so disgusted Mrs. Colonel Percy Yerger with Matilda and the lemonade that she put on her sunbonnet, went over to the corner grocery and brought back a bucketful of beer. There is more satisfaction in beer than there is in lemonade, anyhow.—Alex. Sweet.

How to Swim.

There really is no mystery in learning to swim—an accomplishment which is possessed in perfection by the most stupid of frogs. More than once I have explained how any one can teach himself. The trunk, less the arms, is heavier than water; with the arms, it is lighter; all, therefore, that a person has to do is to acquire the habit of drawing in the breath when he is preparing to make a stroke, and expelling the breath when he is making it. Let any one do this and keep calm, and he will find that he can swim. But, perhaps, it is better to acquire confidence by a preliminary course of floating. To do this it is only necessary to lie flat on the water, stretch out the arms with the palms of the hands downward, throw back the head, and whenever the body sinks low, slowly to fill the lungs with air.—London Truth.

The first Sunday law on record was made by Constantine the Great in the first quarter of the fourth century, and ever since that time Sunday has been more or less fortified as a non-secular day in Christian countries by civil legislation.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

He Scorned Dishonesty.

An easy-going, honest-minded old country merchant in Iowa had been in trade for a dozen years when he took in his son as a partner. The boy had lived in Chicago for three or four years and was up to snuff. One day after the partnership had lasted about seven months, the old man came down in the morning and found the doors of the store closed and a sign up to the effect that the firm had failed. He walked over to his son's house and asked: "James, did you lock the store?" "I did."—"What is the matter?" "Why, we have failed, and can only pay 15 cents on the dollar." "James," continued the old man as he pulled down his hat, "I'm going down and open the door with a crow-bar, and resume business at 100 cents on the dollar! For thirteen long years I have given fifteen ounces to the pound and measured both finders with every yard of cloth, and the idea of taking any further advantage of the Lord goes agin my conscience. Duty to Others.

Chambersburg, July 25, 1875.

This is to let the people know that I, Anna Maria Krider, wife of Tobias Krider, am now past seventy-four years of age. My health had been very bad for some years past. I was troubled with weakness, bad cough, dyspepsia, great debility and constipation of the bowels. I was so miserable I could hardly eat anything. I heard of Hop Bitters, and was resolved to try them. I have only used three bottles, and I feel wonderfully good, well and strong again. My bowels are regular, my appetite good, and cough all gone. I feel so well that I think it my duty to let the people know, as so many knew how bad I was, what the medicine has done for me, so they can cure themselves with it. Anna M. Krider, wife of Tobias Krider.

TECUMSEH, MICH., SEPT. 21, 1882.

Political conventions and agricultural fairs are having a big run now.

B. F. Graves, of Adrian, has received the Republican nomination for representative in the Second District of this county.

Dr. R. B. House did not quite get the nomination for State Senator, but he need feel no chagrin over the result. He polled a good vote which showed how he stood where he is best known.

The Republican county ticket is a good one. The candidates for Sheriff, County Clerk and Register could not well be improved upon, and the balance of the ticket is creditable. Some men on the ticket cannot be beaten in any event. Whether the ticket as a whole can be elected will depend very materially on the action of the Democratic and Greenback County Conventions.

In Dr. Geo. Howell, of Macon, the Republicans of this representative district have a good candidate. He is a man of high personal worth, upright and conscientious in all his dealings, and well schooled for that position. He occupies a radical position on the temperance question, and is an outspoken Ferry man, which latter fact probably had considerable to do with his nomination. He ought to poll his full party vote in this district, and, if successful, he will make a creditable representative.

Mayor Low, of Brooklyn, a Republican, has sent a circular to the heads of all city departments in which he says: "Be so good as to assure the employes of your department that their salary is intended to compensate them for faithful service to the city; and that failing in that respect, no amount of contributions for party service will avail them." There is a slight difference between this circular and one of Arabi Hubbell's.

In the nomination of Col. N. B. Eldredge for Congress the Democratic convention made an admirable choice. A farmer, a physician, a lawyer, a sheriff, a soldier, a man of leisure, in the prime of life and enjoying a ripe experience, he is a typical man to represent an agricultural district like ours in the halls of the National Congress. It seemed advisable to many that a union candidate should be placed in nomination, but as the action of the Greenbackers rendered such a union impossible, the convention did the next best thing, placed a man of known party fidelity and personal fitness in the field. The Colonel's army record will be worth many votes to him, while his outspoken position on the tariff reform and anti-monopoly issues will be an element of strength in the present campaign. If Col. Eldredge could receive all the votes to which he is legitimately entitled, that is the combined Democratic and National vote, he would certainly be our next congressman; and the chances are in his favor even as the case now stands.

Here is a good platform for congressional candidates to stand on:

1. If elected to Congress will you vote and work for the abolition of the internal revenue tax system except the tax on liquors and tobacco?

2. Will you labor and vote for the abolition of the internal revenue tax offices which impose a needless tax on the people of $5,000,000 a year?

3. Will you labor and vote to revise the present iniquitous tariff which robs the people of hundreds of millions annually to enrich a few monopolists, and to place the tariff upon a strictly revenue basis?

4. Will you frown upon all land grabs and River and Harbor steals, and vote to restore the government expenses to the strictest economy, and thus relieve the people from the shameless profligacy and extravagance which rule the present Congress?

5. Will you labor and vote to make future party assessment robbery impossible and thus remove one of the chief causes of our present political corruption?

Their fellow citizens would like to know where Col. Eldredge and Hon. John K. Boies stand on these questions.

CONGRESSIONAL CONVENTION.

The Democrats Hold Their Conference and Nominate Col. N. B. Eldredge by Acclamation.

The Democratic Congressional Convention assembled in Adrian last Thursday. Ira B. Card, of Hillsdale, was chosen temporary chairman.

On motion a committee of one from each county was named as a committee on credentials, as follows: Lenawee—Edward P. King; Hillsdale—John F. Fitzsimmons. Monroe county not being represented, on motion of Dr. Finch, the delegation from that county was instructed to fill the vacancy when they reached the city.

The convention then took a recess until after dinner.

Upon reassembling after dinner the committee on credentials reported a full list of delegates present from each county.

Seth Bean moved that a committee of four be appointed to confer with the greenback committee, and endeavor to secure a union on a candidate for congress. He urged that with a union there was a prospect for success; without it defeat was certain. The state conventions had united. He said he had assurance given him that if such action was taken here to-day Mr. Baker would withdraw, and that a union could be secured on another candidate.

Quite a lengthy discussion ensued, pro and con, and the convention finally laid the resolution on the table. The general sentiment seemed to be that the Greenbackers had forestalled any action of this kind by hastily putting a candidate of their own in the field, and as no one could vouch for Mr. Baker's withdrawal in any event, it was deemed best to go ahead and nominate a candidate.

The first ballot resulted as follows:

L. H. Saulsbury	20
C. H. Richmond	5
N. B. Eldredge	5
J. S. Strong	9
S. Bean	2
Wm. Corbin	9
Edwin Willitts	1

Mr. Hulett moved that Mr. Saulsbury be nominated by acclamation.

Mr. Saulsbury was firm in his refusal. He could not, under any circumstances, accept the nomination.

Col. Eldredge and Hon. A. L. Millard were both placed in nomination and both declined.

The chairman then appealed to Col. Eldredge to accept the honor tendered him, remembering that the office should seek the man, not the man the office. And thereupon the Colonel was unanimously nominated by acclamation.

In accepting the tender, Col. Eldredge promised to make the best run he could, and asked the delegates to go home and do likewise.

A district committee was appointed, and the convention then adjourned.

The North American Review for October opens with an article on "The Coming Revolution in England," by H. M. Hyndman, the English radical leader, giving an instructive account of the agitation now going on among the English working classes for a reconstruction of the whole politico-social fabric of that country. O. B. Frothingham writes of "The Objectionable in Literature," and endeavors to point out the distinction between literature which is per se corrupting, and that which is simply coarse. Dr. Henry Schliemann tells the interesting story of one year's "Discoveries at Troy." Senator John I. Mitchell, of Pennsylvania, treats of the rise and progress of the rule of "Political Bosses." Prof. George L. Vose, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contributes an article of exceptional value on "Safety in Railway Travel;" and Prof. Charles S. Sargent, of the Havard College Arboretum, contributes an instructive essay on "The Protection of Forests." The Review is sold by booksellers and newsdealers generally.

Don't Trust Them.

When you feel badly, and you have pains here and there in your body that you don't know how to account for, it is the most foolish policy in the world to take the advice of people who say: "Oh, there's nothing the matter with you. Let yourself alone and you will come out all right." These folks know nothing about it, and may be trifling with your life. You may have kidney or liver trouble. Send right out to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. David Kenpedy's "Favorite Remedy," and then you will be all right, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

FRUIT PROSPECTS IN MICHIGAN.

Out of 100 reports to the Secretary of the State Horticultural Society, only one correspondent puts the apple crop at the full average, while 34 place it at less than one-fourth of a crop, 50 reports make it less than one half a crop, and 75 less than three fourths of an average yield. The pear crop promises better, say 75 per cent. of a full yield. Peaches in unfavorable localities for this fruit are a complete failure. Upon high ground in the interior there will be above a half crop. The most prolific fruit in Michigan this year is the grape crop. The plum crop will be a good average where persistent efforts have been made to fight the curculio.

There are many theories concerning the cause of failure in apples. It is laid to east winds, frosts, moist weather at time of blossoming, etc. The common explanation seems to be that the continuous frosts through May weakened the vitality of the young fruit so that it dropped through June. The varieties of apples that have hung on the trees best are the Baldwin and Golden Russet. Fall apples seem to be almost a dead failure. The Northern Spy, which is a great favorite in our State, will be represented by very small quantities in our fruit cellars next winter. Cider, apple jelly, and evaporated apples will be reduced to a minimum.

Visiting Good Farms.

The many fairs that are being held in various sections of the country are doing much towards advancing a far more enlightened agriculture. We have already pointed out some of the advantages to be gained by a careful study of the exhibits, and the importance of taking an active part in these fairs. Another suggestion to the same end is offered here, which, if acted upon, will supplement the work of the fairs and do much good to all progressive farmers. It is a duty of every farmer to visit yearly some of the best farms in the country, and there gather practical lessons in improved agriculture. There is no method of learning about any farm subject equal to being on the farm where it is practiced, and having it explained by the one who has made it a success. It may be the way of feeding stock, or a plan of preserving roots, ensilage, or other fodder. A farmer may contemplate a system of underdrains for his wet fields, in this case it would be best to make a visit to some farmer who has thus drained his farm, and gain from him many valuable hints and suggestions in this important work. Such visits not only give new ideas, but are a wholesome recreation, and many a farmer who at the first thought may say, "I cannot afford it!" will find by experience that he has spoken too soon. Take a day to go and visit some one of the best farms in the county, and this will open the way for further visits and a wider knowledge of the best methods of farming.—American Agriculturist for October.

The American Agriculturist for October is an unusually attractive and valuable number of this old, reliable and famous journal. We notice important changes in the new and handsome cover, fine paper, and superior finish of the many engravings. It is a double number, containing a large Premium List filled with many desirable articles for those who make up clubs.

Among the leading contributors: P. H. Jacobs, on Poultry-keeping, fully illustrated; J. N. Muncey, on Feeding Hogs; Dr. Geo. Thurber, on Gladiolus, Skull-caps, Hemp and other plants; Prof. Buckhout, on Bladder Plums; L. D. Snook, on Household Devices; X. A. Willard, on Cold Storage of Butter; Prof. W. H. Jordan, on Ground Limestone; Col. M. C. Weld, on Ensilaging Corn Fodder; Mr. Orange Judd, on Crops and Prices, etc.; and D. D. Bishop, on Curing Corn Fodder. Guenon's Wonderful Discovery; Farming in Egypt; Fall Plowing; Humbugs Exposed, are all important. Of the eighty illustrative engravings are two large ones of "October;" "Farewell to the Woods;" Camp Tip-Top—a Summer Home; Prize House-plans; Red Polled Cattle, and a long list of labor-saving devices for the farm, garden and household, such as: Field Roller, Loading Corn, Mending Tools, Pig Rack, Fence Posts, Door Latch, Hoe, Potato Bin, Cold Cellar, Filter, Shoe Box, etc., etc. The Children's Columns are full of instructive reading—The Doctor Talks on Various Kinds of Nuts, Galls, etc. Orange Judd & Co., publishers, New York. $1.50 per annum; single number, 15 cents.

During a theatrical performance at the Kalamazoo opera house, a few nights ago, a plasterer named George O'Brien, while occupying a reserved seat on top of a window sash, fell out to the street below, a distance of 25 feet. He was drunk enough to escape with but slight injuries, and according to local chronicles the first boy who reached him said: "Say, mister, lemme have yer check."

The best remedy for exerting a powerful tonic effect on the muscles governing and controlling the action of the heart, is Brown's Iron Bitters.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

There are 208 legally qualified teachers in Sanilac county this year.

The mayor of Port Huron is after the Sunday base ball players.

Ionia probably has more lawyers than any other town of its size in the state.

Bear Lake Odd Fellows propose to organize and establish a lodge of that order in their village.

Rev. Paris Bradford, of St. Clair, accepts a call to the Lawrence, Van Buren county, congregational church.

E. Gale's jewelry store at Schoolcraft was entered and robbed of about $300 worth of goods.

Work has been commenced on the new town hall at Elk Rapids. The building when completed will be an ornament to the town.

Matthews & Hoff, of Carleton, Monroe county, shipped 351 cars of charcoal to Wyandotte during the year ending September 1.

The charcoal iron furnace at Elk Rapids is said to be the largest of the kind in the world. From 50 to 60 tons of pig iron are manufactured each day.

The Battle Creek Driving Park association will hold a fall series of trotting and running races October 5, 6 and 7. The entries close September 15.

Arthur Shay, who mysteriously disappeared from Cadillac a week ago, has turned up in Dakota, whither he had gone without informing his friends.

The funeral of Judge Melendy, who died at Eaton Rapids on the 10th, was held at Hillsdale, where he formerly lived and where he graduated from college.

Local improvements are the order of the day at Ionia. The gas works are the newest thing, and are nearly completed. The mains are being laid, and soon the gas will be turned on.

Ontonagon county has within its boundaries and tributaries to the Ontonagon river, according to the lowest estimate, between three and four billion feet of pine lumber.

Mayor Howard, of Port Huron, proposes to push prosecution against violations of the liquor laws, and hotels, and drug stores and saloons will all be dealt with alike. Several complaints have been made.

W. S. Hull, who for three years has been city editor of the Grand Rapids Democrat, has resigned and becomes manager of the Grand Rapids base ball club.

There is a movement on foot to raise funds with which to build a monument to the memory of the late Rev. O. S. Wolfe, well known in life throughout northern Michigan as an untiring, missionary of the cross.

The new military organization at Grand Rapids is to be known as the Peninsula Zouaves. They will wear zouave uniforms and drill according to zoozoo tactics.

The people at Sheridan are engaged in an exceedingly acrimonious quarrel about school affairs. Two sets of officers have been chosen, both claiming to have been legally elected, and both trying to act. Each has engaged a different principal for the schools, and it now appears as if the law will be invoked to decide the dispute.

A writer in the Grand Rapids Democrat now seeks to annihilate Governor Jerome by saying that the governor sat in his carriage during the review at Brighton and never lifted his hat—not once. These awful charges come thick and fast. Next thing he he knows he will be accused of sticking the hot end of a cigar in his mouth as the troops marched past.

The Popular Science Monthly for October, 1882.

The October number of "The Popular Science Monthly" is one of great excellence. While all its articles deserve to be well spoken of, several of them are unusually fitted to attract attention. The first place among this number must be given to the opening article, by Douglas Graham, M. D., on "Massage: its Mode of Application and Effects," the matter of which is both valuable and novel. It is an account of a combined operation of rubbing and kneading the body, systematically and intelligently performed, as an aid to the curing of disease. Matthew Arnold's lecture on "Literature and Science," in which the first place is given to literature in the scheme of education, while science is admitted as a subordinate department of literature, is the next article. A review of the paper in the editor's table exposes the utter insufficiency of Mr. Arnold's valuation of science.

In "Industrial Education in the Public Schools," Prof. Straight projects a scheme under which pupils should be turned out prepared to do honest, thorough work as a matter of course. Dr. Felix Oswald lends the unique charm of his keen humor to the discussion of "Physiognomic Curiosities." "The Formation of Saline Mineral Waters," by Mr. Dieulafait, is a suggestive study in chemical geology. "A Partnership of Animal and Plant Life," by K. Brandt, offers a solution to a biological problem that has caused much perplexity. The Portrait and Sketch are of Professor Rudolf Virchow, physiologist, anthropologist, and advocate of popular rights.

Twin Comets.

Prof. E. E. Barnard, of Nashville, Tenn., on the 14th inst., discovered a new comet located near the star Lambda, in the constellation of the Twins. His discovery was announced by telegraph to Mr. H. H. Warner, at the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., and almost at the same moment Prof. Lewis Swift, Director of the Warner Observatory, received intelligence that a large naked eye comet had been discovered in Rio Janeiro, South America. Prof. Barnard is the first person the present year to receive the Warner prize of $200. The fact that these two comets came into view at the same time is exceedingly significant.

Blissfield Advance: Palmyra was all excitement last Friday over the concealment of a supposed murderer in a piece of woods in that village, said to have escaped from the Lansing jail. Telegrams were sent to Adrian for officers and the timber scoured by about fifty men, but their efforts to capture him were fruitless.

A letter from Alva Coddington states that he and Clem Bramble are now attending Kalamazoo college. In our notice of last week we termed it the Baptist college. This is true, but it might convey an errroneous impression, and we cheerfully make the desired correction. The college is under Baptist control, but its corporate name is "Kalamazoo College." We used a term that is frequently used in speaking of that institution.

BRIGGS' BOSTON MINSTRELS.—The above troupe performed before a large audience at the Academy of Music last evening. The performance was equal to that of any of the minstrel troupes which have lately performed in the city. Mr. Frank West was very good, while Mr. Shimer received several encores from the audience. The electric quartette was repeatedly called before the curtain, as were also Messrs. Carmody and Mack. The concluding performance gave great amusement to the "gods." Clinton News: David Woodward invaded our sanctum the other day and gave us a very urgent invitation to take a ride with him up to his fruit farm. Although we were busy we couldn't resist the temptation thus offered to sample his fine peaches, and accepted his invitation. Mr. Woodward's fruit farm is situated on the Dwight Kies farm, five miles north of town, and comprises twenty acres all set out to fruit. It is just the place to raise fruit, being situated on the high ridge of ground on the east side of the Kies farm—the highest land in the neighborhood. Mr. Woodward has laid out a good deal of money and labor on his fruit farm, and this is the first year he has derived any income from it, as the oldest peach trees are bearing for the first time. He has 4000 peach trees, a large number of pear trees, raspberry and blackberry bushes and small fruit.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

It has been rumored that I have sold my East lumber yard and gone out of the business. Such is not the case. I have not sold, and intend to continue my sash and door and blind factory, lumber yard and planing mill on the corner of Shawnee and Pearl Sts., and also have my office and paint shop in the brick building where it has been. I am also in the lumber and coal business, as heretofore, and shall be pleased to serve my customers with lumber of all kinds, building material, sash, doors, blinds, etc., at bottom figures.

The following contract will verify these statements and show plainly my business relations with J. R. McGlone & Co., or the Tecumseh Lumber Co., showing that S. W. Temple and the Tecumseh Lumber Co. are two separate institutions.

S. W. TEMPLE.

Tecumseh, Sept. 29, '82.

CONTRACT.

This Indenture, made this 24th day of August A.D., 1882, between Samuel W. Temple, of Tecumseh, Lenawee county, Michigan, of the first part, and J. R. McGlone & Co., of the city of Toledo, Lucas county, Ohio, of the second part.

Witnesseth, that the said party of the first part hath let and by these presents, doth grant, demise and form let unto the said party of the second part, all that piece and parcel of land situate in the Village of Tecumseh, and Sate of Michigan, and described as follows, to wit:

Commencing at a point on Shawnee street in said village, twelve feet west of brick office now occupied by S. W. Temple as a lumber office and hardware; thence north parallel with said office to railroad lands; thence west on said railroad lands including boundaries of lands leased to Edwin V. DePuy by William Richards and S. W. Temple; thence south to Shawnee street; thence east on the north line of Shawnee street to the place of beginning, with the appurtenances including the rights of alley ways now open, from the 24th day of August, 1882, to the 24th day of February, 1883, with the privilege of two years from said 24th day of February, 1883, at the monthly rental of thirty dollars per month, payable monthly in advance during the continuance of this lease or so long as said second party shall continue to occupy said above demised premises. And it is agreed that if the rent or any part of said rent shall become due and unpaid, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants herein contained, then it shall be lawful for said party of the first part to re-enter the said premises and take possession and remove all persons therefrom. The said second party doth hereby covenant and agree to pay the said first party the said sum of thirty dollars per month, monthly in advance, so long as they continue to occupy said premises as above described; and at the expiration of said term of six months or any longer period that said second party shall elect to occupy said premises not exceeding two years, quit and deliver up said premises to the first party in as good condition as the same are now in, or may be put in by the first party, reasonable wear and tear and elements excepted, and not to assign this lease or suffer any alterations to be made without the written consent of the first party first obtained in writing, and not to engage in any business nor suffer any business to be done or carried on in said premises in violation of law, or that would render the insurance thereon void, or increase the rate over what it now is; and it shall not be necessary to demand the payment of the rent to entitle the first party to re-entry; said premises to be used only for a lumber yard. It is hereby especially agreed and understood that the alleys spoken of includes the use of the alley west of brick office on said premises.

In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and seals this 24th day of August, 1882.

Witnessed by C. S Curtis and J. A. Chase.

Mr. David D. Jones, of Parkersburg, W. Va., writes: "I experienced for many years great annoyance and suffering from rheumatism and weakness of the kidneys, and my bowels were almost always irregular. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters, which acted like a charm, restoring me at once to regular health, and banishing all pain from my body."

A sad accident occurred at Saddle Lake, near Grand Junction, by which John Lanning and Jay Bridges, of Bangor, were drowned. They were in a party of about 30 young folks, and all attempted to take a boat ride on a primitive bid sheep scow which sank in 12 feet of water. All were rescued but Lanning and Bridges.

They had a benefit concert at Utica a few nights ago with 25 pieces on the program, and when the minister stood up to pronounce the benediction the cooks crept and the hired man began to yawn and swear about getting up.

Live Stock and Farm Notes.

An average two or three-year-old steer will eat its own weight of different materials in two weeks.

There is no loss in feeding cattle well ... variety of materials for the ... of manure alone.

Two or three year old cattle will add one-third of a pound more per day to their weight upon prepared hay and roots than upon the same materials unprepared.

There is no wisdom in working a thirty-acre field year after year to get five bushels of wheat or ten bushels of corn to the acre, when with the same expense for fertilizers you could raise fifteen bushels of wheat or thirty of corn to the acre.

The general effect of lime is to render available the plant food already in the soil, without itself supplying any significant amount. Liming cannot, therefore, be successfully repeated except at considerable intervals.

Judge Miller, of Missouri, says he has learned how a full week may be gained in getting sweet-corn for boiling. As soon as the ear is formed, break the top ... erect in order that the pollen of the tassel may be sure to dust the silk of the ears, as they may not be fully impregnated should the stalk be stopped.

More care is required to make fine, velvety lawns than is usually supposed. It is necessary to have plenty of rich loam, sufficient well-rotted manure or fertilizer, and the best of seed. If the subsoil be sandy or gravelly, a greater depth of loam is needed, or the bottom must be partially puddled with either clay or peat; if not, any manure or top dressing of any description soaks away and disappears entirely.

The secret of success in transplanting is to press the soil well about the roots. In setting out plants, such as cabbage, celery, etc., be sure that the moist soil is brought into contact with the roots by pressing it down with the foot or a hoe, or the back of a spade. Mr. Peter Henderson urges the importance of this matter by compacting the soil both in sowing seeds and in transplanting plants, bushes and trees, and in setting out cuttings.

It appears from experiments that a heaping teaspoonful of paris green to twelve quarts of water is just as certain to destroy the potato beetle as a larger quantity; but one pound of the poison mixed with 100 pounds of plaster may be applied by the hand, as it is proved by repeated tests that no bad results will follow taking it in the bare hands when mixed in these proportions. The plaster is worth to the crop all the labor expenses.

Jerusalem artichokes have long been known as a most valuable addition to the rations of hogs, but that they are even more valuable as an addition to the diet of cattle seems to be less generally recognized. They are hardy, yield fair crops on poor and very large ones on rich soil; are more nutritious than the potato, and once planted there will be no need of replanting, as they are not easily got out of a piece of land after they have become established.

The wearisome fault of horses, called forging, wherein they strike and click the hind and fore feet, is sometimes caused by too heavy shoeing. A very heavy, awkward shoe is not always a good shoe. Lowering the feet is sometimes a remedy. Much is due also to the breaking of the young animal, and if he has been made to forge the remedy should be applied as quickly as possible. Keeping the head up is a good idea. Horses prone to this habit throw their fore feet back, lunge, and do not get themselves up in shape.

The daily food of "Queen of Barnett," a Jersey cow that has a record of 746 pounds of butter in 1881, consists of four quarts of bran, four quarts of ground oats, three quarts of corn meal, eight quarts of carrots, and all the good hay she can eat daily. Would there not be more famous Cows if they had the same treatment? There is a good deal of truth in the adage that "the breed is in the mouth" We shall never know the capacity of common cows till we give them uncommon advantages.

The Early Attractions of a Western Village.

We heard a Western village praised very highly by a friend the other evening for the singular objects of curiosity which the town and its environs contained. "I saw," said he, "the tree on which six gamblers were hung at one and the same time. There was a "hard set" out looking at the tree when I reached it. It was covered, lower limbs and all, with handbills. One was of a cock fight, which was to take place that night; another of a "bull-dog match" that afternoon; and a third of a "sparring mill" that was to come off between two professors of the "manly art of self-defense." I noticed at the tavern, where I "put up," a glass jar on a shelf over the fireplace, which contained what I took, at the first glance, to be a couple of pieces of preserved lemon or orange peel. "What is that in that jar, landlord?" I asked. "A couple of ears that were cut off in this very room, by two cowardly rascals, more than a year ago; and there they shall stay till the scoundrels see 'em. They can't disguise themselves so that I wouldn't know 'em, if they was ever to come in here and once look at them 'ere ears!" "This was some years ago," added our friend, "and I am glad to hear that the place has now become a peaceful and orderly town."—Cincinnati Commercial.

There was a man from Pike County who happened to be in Philadelphia over Sunday. Not knowing what to do with himself, he visited one of the churches, and listened to a sermon on the fateful words, "Mene, mene, tekel upharsin." When he returned home, he gave his wife a full account of his adventures. "I think," said he, "that Philadelfy hain't got no rale, true religion, Jane. But what kin we expect where a preacher, without enny one sayin' a word agin him, stan's up and starin' at a gal in one of the nigh pews, hollers out every now an' then, 'Minnie, Minnie, tickle your parson?' "—Brooklyn Eagle.

It is not generally known that a few springs of cedar bush, mixed with hay or any kind of litter for hens' nests will keep them entirely free from hen lice.

A Serpent's Squeeze.

Fighting for Life in a Cage.

In the summer of 1880 I got a nasty squeeze from a big python in the Jardin ... up for several days. I had observed this snake, a female about fourteen feet long, in one of the dens, and from the white efflorescence about her lips, knew that she was suffering from caries of the jaw with ulceration of the mucous membrane, so fatal to snakes in confinement; and having pointed this out to M. Vekemann, the resident director, I obtained his permission to make trial of an ointment which I believed I had found efficacious in the early stage of the disease among my own snakes.

I came on the following morning, armed with my ointment, but the lady had betaken herself into a crevice of the rocks, where one could scarcely catch sight of her, much less get at her. There were other pythons in the cage, some of them nearly twenty feet long, some not more than five or six; but though they projected their heads and commenced to hiss, they did not attempt to attack me. I spoke French, said they would not come at us if we did not touch them. A little one jumped harmlessly at my leg as I stepped over him. For three days the pythoness remained in her rocky, or rather plastery, retreat; but on the fourth I caught sight of her at the very top of the cage, and at once climbed up and brought her down. The poor thing's mouth was in a worse state than I had anticipated. She came down quietly enough, and though nervous, was not spiteful, and allowed me to handle her.

Now, as ill-luck would have it, the regular keeper was absent on this particular morning, and his place was filled for the time by another from some other part of the gardens, who spoke nothing but Flemish, of which tongue I am as profoundly ignorant as he most certainly was of the creatures under his temporary charge. I went into the den with him, taking it for granted, of course, that he was accustomed to snakes, and gave him the box of ointment to hold until I was ready to use it.

When I had brought the pythoness fairly down to the floor, I gripped her hard by the neck, which had the effect—as I intended it to have, and as it always has with snakes—of making her open her mouth. I pressed her head away from me at the same time, to prevent her catching hold of any part of my clothing, in her efforts to bite. In her fright and rage, she drew her body up across my back, and twisted her tail round and round my other arm. All that I now required of the keeper was, by teasing or pinching her here and there, or by unwinding the tail when necessary, to cause her to shift her coils constantly, and prevent her resting long enough on one spot to apply undue pressure. My face I could protect for myself with the left hand. This I concluded he understood, as a matter of course.

I turned round to make a sign to him to be ready and to give me the ointment, when, judge of my dismay I caught sight of his stolid face, with a sort of dull, impartial interest on it, looking at me through the glass in front and the door closed on the outside! He had got frightened by the noise of the other pythons, and had quietly gone out again.

I was about to make an impatient gesture, when in the same instant the serpent tightened on me so suddenly and violently that I momentarily lost consciousness. I then found myself staggering about the den, fighting for life. I expected to feel my ribs give way every moment, yet my chief fear at the same time was of falling through the glass.

I pushed the reptile's head away from me with all my might, lest it should cross my breast, and I can remember catching sight of myself, a mulberry-colored figure, in the mirror. I knew, too, that I was tramping about over the other pythons, who, furious at the disturbance, were now darting about the den above and all around me in every direction; and I exerted every energy to keep my feet, for I had presence of mind enough left to know that if I went down it would be all over with me.

The heat was stifling. I could bear it no longer. The cage spun madly round and round before my eyes, and every thing seemed to flame and roar. I let go the head. The snake twisted sharply back over my right shoulder close to my face, but did not bite me, and slid off on to the ground. I just recollect falling against the door with outstretched hands, but nothing more until I found myself sitting on the steps outside, coughing violently, while the phlegmatic keeper was putting a hot key down my back, for some occult reason. I brought up a little blood, and drank a little brandy, after which I soon got better; but I was not well enough to walk home, and the bruise in my side did not fade for many a day. I suppose the whole affair did not last more than a few seconds, but I found it quite long enough. Fortunately the snake had only a small part of her body across my left side and back; had she encircled me with a whole coil I should have been crushed like an egg-shell.

Curiously enough, my left arm was quite paralyzed, and I did not fully recover the use of it for a week. I did not know it at the time, but she must have pressed her tail under my armpit, and so compressed the nerves. The accident was one of the stupidest and most preventable in the world, and was entirely owing to my taking the wrong man into the cage to assist me. I may add that I went in some days later with the proper keeper, and performed the operation, not only without danger, but without the least difficulty.

It is estimated that nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds of paper are produced annually; one half of which is used for printing, a sixth for writing, and the remainder is coarse paper for packing and other purposes. The United States alone produces yearly 200,000 tons of paper, averaging seventeen pounds per head for its population. The Englishman comes next with about twelve pounds per head; the educated German takes eight pounds; the Frenchman seven pounds, whilst the Italian, Spaniard and Russian take respectively three pounds, one-half pound and one pound annually.

The Biggest Idea Yet.

They looked hungry and tired, and they were certainly ragged and dirty as they were espied by a Wall street news reporter sitting in the shade of the de-

"Jim!" suddenly remarked one, "I've struck the biggest idea yet!"

"Found a plug of tobacco?"

"Not much; suppose we two could buy every line of railroad in the United States?"

"Yes."

"Look what our income would be for a week! It couldn't be less than $25,000. We keep 'em four weeks, secure a fortune of $50,000 each, and then sell out and go to Europe."

"Come in!"

They loafingly entered the depot to make arrangements with the ticket agent to buy that road as a starter, but in two minutes one came out of the door on the jump and the other went through a back window which was open.

A lady living near Toronto became very sick. The doctor ordered a dose ... the city to get it, but thinking that the priest who lived near might have some brandy, he went to the priest's house and secured his flask. Afterwards he gave the priest money to replace the borrowed liquor. The priest was fined $75 for selling liquor without a license. Justice is mighty and must prevail in Canada.

Gents—I have taken not quite one bottle of the Hop Bitters. I was a feeble old man of 78 when I got it. To-day I am as active and feel as well as I did at 30. I seen great many that need such a medicine. D. Boyce, Heilbron's Husband.

The Viscount de la Panouse, husband of Mme. Heilbron, the actress, has adroitly managed to get the better of his bourse creditors. When the late crash took place, the couple were supposed to be utterly ruined. The viscount had lost $500,000, and owed $200,000 to stock-brokers. He at once gave out his departure for the cape, while the viscountess was to return to the stage during his absence. But she had no sooner sold their hotel to pay off some of their debts than a rat was smelt, and the viscount, who had made overeverything to his wife, was found to be living like a fighting cock in a quiet little village in Auvergne. The stock-brokers forthwith sued him. His counsel, however, took advantage of the code, which admits certain bourse speculations to be illegal, and the court has non-suited the plaintiffs on that ground.

J. D. Kellogg, Dear Sir:—I feel it an obligation to ourselves and others to say that when our little boy had typhoid fever, and at the turning point he commenced sinking, and the restoratives the doctor had left did him no good, and he kept sinking, finally we commenced bathing him with your Columbian Oil, and he commenced to rally from the very first application, and I am happy to say that he is in perfect health. For the last four years we have used it for almost every ailment, and it has given us perfect satisfaction. Yours very truly,

"About what time will he be back?" said the man, persistently.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

David Sexton.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of the medicines now sold are worthless. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon those great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system. For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and connections said to be just as good. For Diabetes, ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIGG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent Removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craigg was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster county, N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craigg that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craigg demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go back to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." ruined eye and treated Mr. Craigg with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's great success as a Surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

A Colored Preacher Who Couldn't Control Himself.

Parson Hensely stole a horse, and was arraigned before the court. "Parson," said the judge, "I have always regarded you as an honest man, and I am surprised to see you here, arrested upon such a charge, and with proof so conclusive. Why did you steal the horse, parson?"

"Jedge, dat word steal, much as I admires de flippancy ob yer language, sah, is jist a trifle too stiff far dis heah occasion. Now I'll tell yer jist how dis thing occured. In de fust place, I'se a sleepwalker. While I was asleep I went ter de stable, and tuck de horse out."

"But the evidence shows that you plowed the animal awhile——"

"Zackly, sah. I'll tell you what's a fack, jedge; las' year I drapped off ter sleep airly in de spring, an' when I woke up I had done made a crap."

"That's all very well, parson. The evidence says that after plowing the horse a while you sold him to a chicken peddler."

"Zackly, sah. I'll tell yer what's a fack, jedge; two years ago I went ter sleep an' when I woke up I had sold my steers, got de money, bought a ferry boat, sold hit, bought a horse, sold hit an' put de money out at intrust wid a brudder in de church."

"That's all very straight, parson, but the evidence says that shortly after you sold the horse the owner and a constable came along. You took to your heels and did not stop until you were shot in the arm."

"Zackly, sah. I'll tell yer what's a fack, jedge; durin' de wah I went ter sleep one day an' when I woke I foun' dat de soldiers had been chasin' me roun' for more'n a week."

The case was submitted to the jury, and in a very short time a verdict of guilty was rendered.

"Well, parson," said the judge, "how long do you think you can sleep?"

"I doan know 'zackly, sah, but I'll tell yer what's a fack, jedge——"

"Never mind any more facts, parson. We'll just assign you to a ten years' nap. After this snooze you can no doubt keep awake. You are all right, I find, so long as you are awake, but you will sleep."

Diseased Cattle.

The outbreak of what is known as splenic fever, in this State and in Pennsylvania, has caused considerable alarm among drovers and large cattle owners. About Pittsburg it has proved very fatal. The splenic fever has been commonly known as Texas fever, and Northern cattle have taken the disease recently in most cases where they have come in contact with Texas cattle. It is a disease peculiar to the ox tribe, and occurs among Southern cattle in a mild form in the early Spring. In others the germs of the disease remain latent and are developed with great rapidity when the animal is subject to shock, such as stampede, or to hardships consequent on railroad travel. It is indigenous to Texas, but exceedingly fatal to Northern cattle.

Owners of cattle in the Northern States will probably take active measures to prevent Southern cattle mixing with their herds. The United States have adopted meaures to prevent the introduction of disease from imported cattle. The law provides that the importer shall select a place for the detention of imported cattle. They are transferred thence by another vessel, and must be kept 300 feet away from any other cattle. The term of quarantine is ninety days, but the time of the voyage is to be counted as a part of the period. The importer has to file bonds in twice the value of the animals for the observance of quarantine restrictions. In connection with the Federal quarantine, the War Department in 1880 ceded to the Treasury Department a tongue of land on the inside of Sandy Hook.

The Cattle Commissioners have been studying the contagious diseases of cattle, and Professor James Law, of Cornell University, has been for some time experimenting on the prevention of pleuro-pneumonia by means of inoculation. His experiments, however, are not so complete that he is ready to give them to the public. The Commissioners have had the subject of the Texas fever brought to their attention, and it is presumed all possible measures will be taken to prevent the spread of the disease. The particulars of the malady afflicting the cattle of Central New York have been specially reported to the Commissioners.—Rochester Democrat.

A Mosaic Portrait of Garfield.

Dr. Salviati, who gave to this country the fine mosaic portrait of Lincoln now in the library of congress, and who is now completing a companion portrait of Garfield, which he will also give to America, was formerly a leading lawyer of Vicenza in Venetia. Seeing the magnificent mosaics in St. Mark's church, Venice, going to destruction because no one understood how to restore and preserve them, he abandoned his profession and began studying the lost art of the Byzantines. By his skill the mosaics of St. Mark's were restored, and he has executed many other important works in Westminster abbey and St. Paul's, London; in the cathedral of Aix-la-Chapelle, where three thousand square feet of surface were covered in two years and a half; and at Bangkok, where the outside of a cupola of the king's palace, seventeen thousand square feet in area, was covered with some 2,500,000 bits of gold enamel. The portrait of Garfield is now almost finished in Dr. Salviati's studio in Venice, and is described as a marvelously perfect piece of work.

The police department of San Francisco has inaugurated a crusade against a class of men whose existence is scarcely known outside of their own stratum of society. They are known as "lovers," and are the men who live off the earnings of women of the town. San Francisco magistrates are fining them heavily in the effort to make them either go to work or quit the city. Their mistresses usually pay the fine.

Gastronomic Gossip.

Fish and shell-fish dinners are being carried to extremes.

Eight out of a dozen salads are ruined by inferior olive oil.

Vau au vent of frogs maketh the epicure's hair stand on end.

It is only the French cook who can make the toughest steak tender.

There has been a considerable amount of mushroom literature of late.

An authority says the best way to eat oranges at a table is with a spoon. Spoony couples should bear this fact in mind.

The caster is no longer a necessary article of table furniture—in fact, it is dispensed with altogether on many handsomely-set tables: its place is supplied by pretty jug-shaped bottles at each end of the table, which is certainly a more convenient arrangement. The same tables are provided with pretty and quaint individual bottles at each plate.

Cookery is an art for which peculiar talent is necessary to bring forth good results. A serious error is to suppose that the subject of what one eats and drinks is unimportant, for the fact remains that the consideration is of so far reaching effect as that of the kitchen. When one reflects upon the dependence of the mind and character upon the bodily condition, and how closely the latter is involved in the material that supplies it, one cannot escape the conviction that a good cook is a public benefactor, and the caterer who feeds his fellow-creatures wisely and well is greater than he who takes a city.—Hotel Mail.

At the marriage of a colored couple at Brunswick, Ga., the other day, the bride was asked "to love, honor, obey, etc., the man whom she held by the right hand." She quickly replied, "I will just as long as he treats me right, and den after dat I'll quit 'im."

Beware of Them.

A good article that has achieved success, and attained a world-wide reputation by its true merits and wonderful results, is always imitated. Such is the case with Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Already unprincipled parties are endeavoring to delude an unsuspecting public by offering imitations of this most fortunate discovery. Do not be deceived, but insist on having the true remedy, and take no other. Trial bottle free. Large size $1, at C. A. Wright & Co's. drug store.

The Outcome of Miscegnation.

The marriage of Ada Deyo, a pretty and accomplished white girl, and the adopted daughter of John Deyo, a wealthy farmer of Gardiner, Ulster county, N. Y. to a negro who worked for Deyo, in the autumn of 1880, was widely reported at the time. The girl is now an inmate of the Sullivan county poor-house, near Monticello, N. Y. Miss Deyo was engaged to be married to an estimable young man, but the engagement was broken, and shortly afterward she ran away with the negro Sampson. The pair went to all the ministers in Kingston, but were unable to get anyone to marry them until Miss Deyo had been transformed into a negress by the aid of burnt cork. When asked recently why she left her husband the young woman, after a moment's hesitation and crying, replied: "You see, as long as they kept coming to see us, and everybody was excited over our marriage, John was very kind to me. He protected me from inquisitive people, kept up my courage, and appeared to love me as I did him. But he gradually changed, and after out little boy was born he was never the same. Finally he failed to support me, and as I was unable to work for myself, I came here." Mr. Deyo has repeatedly offered to give her a home if she would only leave Sampson.

He Didn't Mind the Expense.

"Fourteen dollars for a little lunch for two!" exclaimed a prosperous-looking customer to the proprietor of a restaurant. "Why, what do you take me for?"

"I know it's a little steep," said the steak stretcher; "but you're the only soul that's been in to-day, and my rent falls due to-morrow."

"I'm blamed if I don't really admire a man with a nerve like yours, and I'll pay the swindle;" and with an amused smile the blooded stranger tossed the hash pirate a fifty-dollar note, flipped a dollar out of the change to the waiter, and walked out.

"What a pity we can only have one chance at a man like that," murmured the dyspepsia dispenser, regretfully. But when, the next day, the rent collector threw out the note as a counterfeit, his despair was such that it was all four waiters and the cook could do to prevent his swallowing a bottle of his own alleged wine, and thus putting an end to himself.

A Big Success.

My wife was in bed two years with a complication of disorders her physician could not cure; when I was led to try Parker's ginger tonic. It was a big success. Three bottles cured her, at a cost of one dollar and fifty cents, and she is now as strong as any woman.—R. D., Buffalo.

MALARIA!

THE ONLY REMEDY KNOWN TO DESTROY THIS DEADLY PEST.

The most alarming fact, in our sanitary conditions, is the prevalence of MALARIA POISON not only in marshy, low-lying districts, but in the cities and upon elevated grounds, where a few years since, it was unheard of. Frequently fatal disorders of the digestive functions, wasted and enfeebled body and even insanity are the dire effects of malarial poisoning, the sure precursors of if the poison is not neuterialized. The boatmen on the Delaware and Hudson Canal, as well as the inhabitants of the adjoining country, have been great sufferers from MALARIA. Not until a few years past did they find a reliable remedy. Now thousands testify that there is but one real and speedy cure for malarial poisoning and that is DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY," which by its action upon the blood purifies it and restores a healthy tone to the entire system, as a preventive in localities where this danger lurks, it is invaluable. The "FAVORITE REMEDY" also cures the worst liver and kidney complaints and all diseases caused by vitiated blood. For sale by all druggists, price $1.00. It is an absolutely safe, purely vegetable remedy, the greatest alterative medicine in the world. Address the proprietor, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

The troops who went to Kafr-el-Dwar Saturday afternoon after prisoners found the place almost deserted, but the guns, horses, tents, etc., were found standing in good condition in charge of a few officers and men. The ministers are preparing a decree disbanding the army. Rifaat Bey was taken prisoner at Cairo. A number of prominent Egyptians are still at large. The banks are preparing to resume business at Alexandria, and the bourse shows signs of animation. A prominent arrival informed the Khedive that Zagazig and the surrounding country had been ruined, and the town of Mansourah pillaged. Lord Dufferin has informed the Porte that England is about to withdraw its forces from Egypt, and leaves it to decide whether it is necessary to now sign the military convention.

General Wolseley telegraphs that the war is over, and that no more men are wanted from England. The khedive and the British consul general will proceed to Cairo, to receive offers of submission. Arabi Pasha and Toulba Pasha surrendered to General McPherson, and were confined in the guard-rooms, while ten thousand rebel troops at Cairo laid down their arms. Kafar-el-Dwar was abandoned by five thousand Egyptians, who are supposed to have gone to the forts at Aboukir. They are to parade at Alexandria on Sunday, surrender their arms, and be stripped of their military dress. Canned provisions for twenty thousand men for a month were captured at Tel-el-Kebir. Arabi Pasha was on Friday taken before the khedive, to whom he declared he had not been aware he was fighting against him.

General Wolseley advanced upon Tel-el-Kebir at daybreak Wednesday, the Egyptians opening fire when the British were one mile distant. The place was captured by a charge, the struggle lasting only twenty minutes. The loss of Arabi Pasha is estimated at two thousand men, besides forty guns and three thousand prisoners. The number killed on the British side was about two hundred. Arabi is said to have escaped on horseback to Zagazig, while his men fled toward the desert, hotly pursued by the Indian cavalry on the south and the British cavalry on the north. The Egyptian regiments are credited with cowardly behavior, while the black troops from the Soudan fought bravely, and the rebel artillery was well served. The khedive's band headed a procession at Alexandria which indulged in a jubilee over the victory of the British. General McPherson pushed forward and occupied Zagazig, capturing five railway trains. The English advance guard has arrived at Cairo by rail, and claims to have been received with enthusiasm. General Wolseley has gone forward and the staff officers will follow. Butros Bey and two pashas went from Cairo to Alexandria and tendered the khedive an address pledging loyalty on the part of the people of the former city. They state that Arabi Pasha was stoned by the populace, and later reports are to the effect that he has been arrested by the prefect of police. Butros Bey says the rebel force at Tel-el-Kebir comprised thirty thousand regulars, seven thousand Bedouins, and three thousand volunteers. The British loss was fifty-four killed and three hundred and fifty wounded. The Egyptians are negotiating for the conditional surrender of Kafar-el-Duar It is claimed by the London Times that General Wolseley, before leaving England, promised to rout the enemy at Tel-el-Kebir on the fifteenth of September. The sultan telegraphed his congratulations to Wolseley and asked that he suspend his advance into Egypt. The general sent a reply referring him to London. British troops have occupied the earthworks at Kafar-el-Dwar.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The 10th infantry, stationed at Fort Brown, Tex., has been authorized to remove into the interior, as the threatened overflow of the Rio Grande will drive them into the yellow fever district.

PENSIONS.

The amount paid for pensions during the year, including the cost of disbursement, is $54,836,836. The total number of pensioners on the roll is 285,697, a gain over the previous year of 16,867. The total amount paid by the government for pensions from 1791 to 1861 was $81,480,455. The total amount paid from 1861 to June 30, 1882, was $500,641,324. Out of this amount and since 1871 $235,268,228 has been paid survivors of the war of 1812 and to the widows of those who served during that war. Deducting this latter amount, and estimating that which may have been paid to pensioners on account of wars prior to 1861—5, about $530,000,000 has been disbursed on account of pensions.

THE STAR ROUTES.

Judge Wylie, in setting aside the verdict in the star route frauds, said: The verdict of guilty, as to Rerdell and Miner, is set aside, not only on account of the misconduct of the jury, but I may say on account of its general unreasonableness—not that the court would have made this decision on that ground alone, but the unreasonableness of the verdict is for the jury rather than the court. These two men seem to be the two ends of the line. It did not seem to my mind they could have gone into the conspiracy without having had any of the others along with them, but the jury thought they could, and I would not have disturbed the verdict on that ground. But when I see that the verdict was made up by a jury that were discussing other matters that were in evidence, of course my duty is plain, to set the verdict aside. As to the acquittal of Peck, who is dead, I hope he is acquitted everywhere. We were not trying him. As to Turner, of course the verdict stands.—The Court grants new trial, therefore, as to all except Turner and Peck.

A DECISION BY JUDGE LAWRENCE.

A recent decision of First Comptroller Lawrence is causing some growling among clerks in the Treasury Department who have been successful in obtaining promotions to higher grades. Hitherto clerks when promoted have sometimes not received their commissions until toward the middle of a month, but the custom of the department has been to allow the increased pay of the higher grade from the date of promotion, which is usually the first of the month. Judge Lawrence decides that every clerk promoted must take the oath of allegiance to the government the same as if it were an original appointment. The increased pay, Judge Lawrence says, can be drawn only from the date of taking the oath again. The oath cannot be taken until the candidate has passed an examination and received his commission, which is often several days after orders have been issued for the promotion. This decision affects every salaried officer in the Treasury Department, no matter where employed, and is a matter of considerable money when the cases of clerks affected are taken together. The notaries public, who reap a harvest from fees in administering the oath, are all pleased with the decision.

DICKSON'S STATEMENT.

Foreman Dickson sent the attorney general, the following letter:

Hon. Benjamin F. Brewster, Attorney General United States.—Sir: During the progress of the star-route trial an attempt was made to corrupt the jury impaneled in the case, and an officer of your department named Henry A. Bowen, a special agent assigned to Arizona, is guilty of offering a bribe to me to influence my judgment and verdict. A sworn statement of the detailed facts has been filed with the district attorney of the District of Columbia, which is accessible to you and to which I respectfully call your attention. As a citizen of the United States I demand from you protection against the venomous, malicious, and contemptible assaults upon my private character by your principal assistants and the officers of the department of justice for daring to perform my sworn duty according to my honest convictions of right and justice.

The district attorney, acting upon the information of Foreman Dickson, will issue warrants for the arrest of Brewster, Cameron, and Henry A. Bowen to answer the charge of attempting to bribe a juror. Mr. Merrick is busily engaged in getting his information into shape to prevent the district attorney from acting, so we are evidently on the brink of a very unpleasant scandal involving charges and counter charges of bribery and perjury.

PINE RIDGE AGENCY.

Acting Secretary of the Interior Joslyn has a letter from Inspector Pollock, investigating the condition of affairs at the Pine Ridge, Dakota, Indian agency. The inspector says: This agency has already been "inspected" twice by my illustrious compeers, and yet the same dissatisfaction among the Indians and charges against the agent are rife. Moreover, reports have been circulated that both the inspectors who preceded me were "bought up" to whitewash the agent. Things have gone from bad to worse here until the prospect of grim-visaged war has paralyzed the country with fear. The cheaper-minded quartermasters department is beginning to move and our unoffending, justice-loving white citizens are sitting on the hilltops watching an opportunity to secure cattle ranches on this solemnly guaranteed reservation. This is the largest and for many reasons, most difficult agency in the United States to detect fraud in the management of, if fraud exists. In addition to many questions as to the management of the agency and the business proper, there is also here a great political contest in which the agent and Red Cloud are the principal actors, and which will cause bloodshed unless settled soon. I hope effectually to settle the troubles, but much time and great labor will be required to fully understand and intelligently report upon the management of any difficulties surrounding this agency.

A CARD FROM DANENHOWER.

Lieutenant Danenhower gives for publication the following card: My attention has been drawn to several items and comments referring to alleged trouble between Chief Engineer Melville and myself. The latest one is in the Washington Star of last evening, and the first that takes a definite shape, stating, under the title, "Melville vs. Danenhower," "Alleged charge of Lieutenant Danenhower, that if he (Melville) had not turned back from the first search Captain DeLong and his companions might have been saved." The above charge has never been made by me. In the first place, the facts would not admit of such a charge, for when Melville turned back the captain's party had been dead at least fifteen days. In the second place, I never would have made such a charge except to the proper official authorities. I have always avoided adverse and premature criticism of my late comrades, and will simply refer to what I said, when confronted by half a score of journalists on board the Celtic on my arrival in New York, and as published in the New York Herald of May 29, 1882, under the caption of "A Vindication of Melville." This was caused by my learning that he had been hastily and unfairly criticised prior to my return. I have made no charge against any one. My personal relations with Melville have been of a very pleasant character. Regretting that I have to appear in print, and hoping there will be no further necessity of it, I am, very respectfully,

JOHN W. DANENHOWER.

Louisville had a grand celebration Tuesday over the completion of several railroads, the chief feature being a procession ten miles in length. The Oriole festival is in progress at Baltimore with imposing ceremonies.

During children's mass at St. Thomas' church in Cincinnati flames appeared near the altar. The little ones became panic-stricken, and trampled each other under foot, but no lives [illegible]

Two more iron-mills at Pittsburg resumed work Monday, and were surrounded all day by angry union men. John Rielly, a striker who went back to duty, will to-day be hanged in effigy. Brown, Bonnell & Co., of Youngstown, O., opened up Tuesday with non-union men.

Charles S. Carter, of Brooklyn, received $17,000 from the Lake Shore road for injuries received in the Ashtabula disaster, and kept intoxicated for four years, when he shuffled off this mortal coil. Now his widow sues a saloon-keeper for $25,000 for causing Carter to become a drunkard.

An extraordinary falling off in the production of the Cherry Grove district caused excitement and an advance in the Bradford oil market, where the sales on Tuesday reached the unprecedented figure of 6,392,000 barrels. The yield of one well decreased in forty-six days from 2,180 barrels in twenty-four hours to one barrel.

The secret order known as the Sons of Columbia, claiming eighty-eight thousand members in the state of New York, is running a line of steamboats on the Hudson, carrying passengers up to Poughkeepsie for ten cents, in order to test the cost of water transportation and to settle the question of a monopoly of docks.

The captain of the British war-ship Comus, just before taking on board the marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise at San Francisco, received an anonymous note warning him that the steamer would be blown up by a torpedo. The captain of the revenue-cutter Richard Rush took a squad of marines and searched the Comus until all fears were dispelled.

Three survivors of the Jeannette expedition, Melville, Ninderman, and Noros, accompanied by Lieutenant Berry, of the relief steamer Rodgers, arrived in New York harbor Wednesday, and were taken off on a yacht and deluged with greetings. A public reception was held at the city hall Thursday afternoon. Lieutenant Danenhower was not on hand to greet his shipmates.

A DAILY EVENT!

The Receipt of Letters Like the Following:

COMMONWEALTH, Wis., July 20, '82.

DR. PENGELLY:—Please send me one more of your Zoa-Phora. The one bottle I have used has done wonders. I have been under doctors' care more or less for five years. Have suffered from Inflammation, Ulceration and Prolapsus Uteri, weakness and heavy head, in fact felt worn out, not able to sit up. I am feeling just splendid now, and shall continue Zoa-Phora until cured. MRS. N. W. HAMAR.

From Mrs. John Spitler, No. 28 Wilt St., Fort Wayne, Ind.:

I have been suffering for over 16 years with spasmodic pain in my head, and general nervous debility. I had a severe attack of pain in my head two weeks ago, caused by weakness and nervous exhaustion. I really thought I should die. We had Zoa-Phora in the house, and my husband said we would test it to the uttermost. He gave it to me, according to directions, for several cases, and in less than two hours, to his great satisfaction, I had what he called immediate relief, and felt like going to sleep. I advise all ladies who suffer with nervous or sick headache, or any form of female weakness, to use your Zoa-Phora, for there is no medicine to compare with it.

May 15th, 1882.

JERSEYVILLE, Ill., April 25, '82.

DR. PENGELLY—Dear Sir:—I am more than pleased with the effects of your Zoa-Phora in our daughter's case. I am surprised to see how she has improved. She is gaining in weight and color; her nerves are steady, and the distress she suffered in her chest is entirely all gone. I firmly believe that Zoa-Phora is all that saved her. I am willing you should use my letter, for I am not afraid to tell what a wonderful cure your medicine is, and I would like all who suffer to try it.

Yours Respectfully,
MRS. SARAH RANDOLPH.

I shall always remember gratefully the good health your medicine has brought my daughter.

Mr. J. D. Kellogg, Dear Sir:—Your Columbian Oil has cured my husband of lung fever two different times. I commenced by giving him nearly a teaspoonful every half hour and bathed his breast and stomach freely, and at the end of three hours he was quite easy, and the next day he was around again. It has also cured others. One lady in particular had got so bad she had chills, and was in the most acute pain; but within four hours after using, she commenced to raise freely. I made a complete cure with the Oil in a short time. My husband had the catarrh so badly that he could not eat a meal of victuals without getting up from the table, but he commenced using the Oil as directed, and it has entirely cured him.

Yours very truly,
Mrs. Mary Stanley.

THE ELKHORN VALLEY.

A Vacation Trip in Nebraska by a Former Tecumseh Pastor.

ED. HERALD—The sentiment which the poet voices in the line—

"Distance lends enchantment to the view,"

has many a time during the summer months, now closing, been a kind of monopoly in my heart and mind. Tecumseh! Ah, what memories the old familiar name suggests—faces of the dear friends, their homes of comfort, the lovely village with its long, [illegible] boughs of those magnificent maples, Village of beauty, churches, schools, homes, and too, village of well respected city of the dead. I would like to walk its streets again and shake hands with its citizens; but since this is denied me at present, perhaps this letter may be as a hand, and its printed words—greeting.

I am now almost upon the borders of the famous Elkhorn Valley of Nebraska; and hearing so much of its fertile soil, salubrious climate and tremendous crops, a friend (pastor in the city) and I resolved upon a week's vacation in this valley of the Elkhorn, now traversed by the trunk line of the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad. We took a short cut to its center over a line of railroad direct from this city to Norfolk, Madison county, Neb., and thence northwest up the railroad almost to Fort Nebraska. Before starting we secured from land officers here the guide books, descriptive pamphlets, etc., of the railroad and other companies having lands for sale in the Elkhorn Valley. These we read, as I have heard of some people reading the dictionary, right through from the first word to the last letter. The millions of acres, the price of lands, the yield of the crops, the market value of the products, the terms of payment from all hard cash in hand to no cash at all for ten years, except 7 per cent. interest; all about homesteads, preemption, free claims, government lands, grazing lands, ranch lands; all about the draws, slues, canyons, runs, ridges, valleys, springs, creeks, rivers; all about the climate, one to two thousand feet above tide level, timber and no timber, groves planted and fifty inches girth in nine or ten years; all about how farms were worked, prairie sod broken, sod houses built, cost of fruit crop and its profits after paying all expenses, purchase price included, and the figures were plain as sums on the blackboard in the school room. All this was read, and was inspiring, but it was on paper in pamphlet which we religiously folded up and put in our pockets as part of our outfit for the Elkhorn Valley vacation. I confess we discounted in advance these glowing descriptions; and I have also to say that we were hasty in that matter. For the Elkhorn Valley as we saw it in 1882 from Blair on the Missouri River for two hundred miles northwest of Fort Nebraska, exceeded the wood pictures of the pamphlet. The harvests on the ground overmatched in abundance the showing of the books, and the herds of cattle, sheep, horses and hogs before our eyes far outnumbered the figures of the printed page.

Miles and miles beyond the railroad terminus of 1881 we were comfortably riding over the extensions for 1882, and here again actual construction had been much more rapid than the promise of the descriptive circulars which spoke of the sure extension of the road soon—so, too, the inducements held out to immigrants and others under promise of rise in value has been far more than realized by purchasers of these lands.

For example, a pastor at Wayne, near Norfolk, (you will find no Wayne set down on any map a year old, for like dozens of other villages through which we passed with populations of from one to eight hundred, all was prairie a year ago); this resident gentleman assured us that the land all through that section of country was now selling at from ten to fifteen dollars an acre—last year the current price being five dollars.

The crops in many places seemed to burden the very earth. Stalks (extreme and exceptional, of course, but a fact, for we saw it,) sixteen feet to the tassel and ten feet to the ear. Our way lay through miles and miles and miles of this plumed king of western crops. And in keeping the oats, rye and barley in some sections, wheat also; such a country at high noon of its best harvest "beggars description." Actual vision alone can convey to the mind this little world of the Elkhorn as it is.

As we went west the country still seemed newer. We missed the frequently recurring groves of box, elder, cottonwood, walnut, plumb, etc. The homes of the husbandmen no longer ensconced among the trees, sat oftentimes in the open field, or amidst little trees not yet so tall as the mighty cornfields stretching away from these beginnings on the prairie far as the eye could reach.

I never before realized what the government was doing for its citizens. Hitherto I had only beheld the "Prairie Schooner" wending its slow way along, or camped for a night, but now I actually saw it arrive at its journey's end. A sight which thrilled me, kindled the fires of patriotism, I felt like uncovering my head and thanking god for such a country and such a government. What a boon to the honest, toiling poor, (lazy and thieving beggars would starve in Paradise or live on alms). I conversed with a large family tented by a brook of living water. There was the father, mother, sons, a daughter, three wagons and three teams, a horse, mule and ox team. Refreshed from a day or two of rest and prospecting, I saw them hitch up their teams, mount their caravansaries and move along over the unbroken surface of the rolling prairie. In an hour they called a halt, they stepped down from their wagons, they unhitched, they unloaded needful things, they tied in the sweet and abundant grass those faithful beasts that had brought them half a thousand leagues in safety. "This will do for us," they said; "this is home; this is ours—our own farm; we now own 160 acres." And so they did—none could dispossess them. Within 90 days they could go to town and file their papers at a cost of some $2.00. $2.00 for a farm! Think of it! But this was for father and mother—the little sisters, no doubt, when they would be at rest. The sons had already settled near, each on his own section. And where was all this? Quite in the world. The railroad (in this case) skirting the south line of the farm, and the village of Ainsworth, with its daily trains east and west, its express and telegraph office only one and a half miles distant, all on the trunk line of the Sioux City and Pacific railroad, which, in about twelve months more, will reach the Black Hills and so open to this homesteader and his neighbors, all the mining districts for their markets.

At Ainsworth we tarried a few days, drove about the country unhindered by any fence, say the thrifty crops on the newly turned sod. It is usual, with an axe for a hoe, to cut through the newly-turned, tough sod, deposit the seed corn, and then let it alone till the harvest. This is sod corn, and as we walked through broad acres of it found it good—no better, though, than the melons and vegetables so abundant everywhere. We could not help thinking how vividly this contrasted with beginnings remote from railroads, and in timbered countries. So, too, as my friend and I sat and discussed it. How unwise for a man with a capital of a few thousand dollars (or a few hundred) to purchase a farm at from $50 to $100 an acre, and load himself with debts, mortgages and interest, which, like the sun, keeps rolling along night and day. Then work and toil and toil and work, hoping to get out of debt sometime. Whereas, here, beginning without debt, owning a larger farm, working no harder, and enjoying school and church privileges. Before he is old the saving in interest, and the rise in land from nothing, or perchance from five, ten or fifteen dollars an acre up to fifty or one hundred. This alone, if he made no actual gains from tillage, would enrich him, yielding him a comfortable income for his old age.

Nothing delighted us more than the noticeable pure water. We drank from "The bucket, the iron-bound bucket, the new oaken bucket that hung in the well." The water is clear, sparkling, cool and very sweet. Wells 25 to 35 feet in depth. The hottest summer noon is not close or sultry. The sun is very hot, but the air is refreshingly cool in the shade, and nights are just right for perfect rest in sleep.

Already I have probably written too long a letter, and will close without a word about Sand Lake, Long Pine River, Short Pine Creek, Silver and Plumb Creeks, all in this immediate neighborhood. The stretches of light soil, sometimes on one side, sometimes on the other side of the Elkhorn, especially as you bear westward, or of the fine red cedar posts in market for nine cents each, and in the stump for cutting; or of the coils of awful looking barked wire about the store fronts. Nothing of this or much more of like import, but at some other time, it may be, I will tell you of the Indians, of a marriage ceremony I performed, of the touching depot scene in this city as parents parted with children, 36 of them under care of Mrs. Fletcher, going from the Omaha reservation, 20 miles distant, to Carlisle, Penn., and Hampton, Va., to be educated at the government expense. What a government to give farms to white folks and education to the red man. Oh, that parting scene! How the tears burst from old men's eyes! How they dashed them away with their red hands! How the children sobbed! The Indian cry of utter despair I heard for the first time, when an aged father laid his head on the shoulders of his lads as they [illegible] just ready to start; and should I live to be old and grey, that more than pathetic, despairing cry will still be in my soul.

Yours sincerely,
WM. GRANDY.

The Best English History.

No History of England, since the publication of Macaulay's famous work, has more promptly and deservedly won the very highest reputation, than Green's "History of the English People." Ranking fairly with Macaulay in the brilliancy and interest of its style, and superior to it in its accurate delineation of events, it covers the entire field of English history, from the earliest to recent times, (and giving the history of the people, rather than of the conflicts of the king only), while Macaulay's history is limited to a very brief period. Green was first published in this country by the Harpers, in four octavo volumes, for $10, but the Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., New York, have issued very handsome editions, at prices ranging from $1 for an octavo cloth-bound volume, to $2.50 for a five volume Elzevir half Russia edition. It ought promptly to find a place in every home library, as, upon the whole, the best as well as the cheapest history of England. For sale in this city by——.

What a Former Invalid Said.

"I suffered for years from an exhaustive weakness, and was fast approaching consumption. I felt that insanity and a premature grave was inevitable; but thanks to Brown's Iron Bitters, I am again restored to perfect health of mind and body." If you, too, are ill, may not this remedy restore your health.

Mr. Parish, an agent of the Bell telephone company, is in Flint looking up the feasibility of connecting that city with Detroit by telephone via Pontiac. If the Flint business men give the scheme sufficient encouragement they will ere long be able to whisper to the metropolis.

Thrifty, energetic women are great helps to their husbands. A sickly woman cannot be energetic. She can be sensible, however, and write to Dr. Pengelly, Kalamazoo, Mich., for advice and information concerning Zon-Phora, the Health-bringer.

Imaginative Travel.

I have no need of a stately ship,
No fear of a stately ship,
In chosen books I take my trip
With the goodliest company;
And whether I read of Southern skies
Or the wealth of an Eastern part,
I may see the world through an author's eyes,
May dwell in camp or court.

Through wonderful sketch books that be
To an artist friend of mine,
I visit the places of legend and song
So famous along the Rhine;
I breathe the spirit of old romance
As I sail the Northern main;
I tread the vine-clad vales of France,
And look for my castles in Spain.

The song of Venetian gondoliers,
As they guide their moonlit boats,
I seem to hear, or the mountaineer's
Tyrolean echo notes.
I may see the heather's purple plumes
Among the banks and braes,
Or wander where the primrose blooms
Along the English ways.

I seek the Land of the Midnight Sun,
Or trace the source of the Nile;
I tread the cedars of Lebanon,
Or study Cevte awhile.
Whenever I tire of time and tide,
No matter how far I roam,
I have only to lay my book aside
To find myself at home.

The world is wide, and the world is fair,
And heroes good to see.
But a hearth and home, and friends to share,
Are all the world to me;
And to sigh in vain for foreign sights
There surely is no need.

And I may live to read.

EFFIE'S MANAGER.

"I won't!" said Effie Stretton, giving her jaunty garden hat a twitch, and folding her plump pink arms defiantly; "it's no use to talk—I can't stay in the house and be a carved image of dignity all my days, and if your fastidious Mrs. Hastings don't like it, she may—whistle!"

"You want to disgrace us all," said her elder sister, Mildred, drawing her black eyebrows together, "digging in that old garden like a ridiculous tomboy as you are, just where all the neighbors can see! Mrs. Hastings says——"

"I don't care if she does," interrupted Effie, stuffing a package of seed into her apron pocket. "I always did want a chance to do something; and, what's the use of renting a suburban cottage and paying a good price for a piece of ground with it if you daren't grow a few onions or a bit of spinach for amusement?"

"I doubt if you'll have the chance long," sighed Mrs. Stretton, a thin, faded woman, with a perpetually worried expression; "the rent is too high; I don't think we can stay——"

"Now, mother!"

Mildred jerked herself up from her lounging position on the green damask-covered sofa and kicked over a footstool with gathering ill-temper.

"We must stay, at least until——"

"Until when?" weakly asked Mrs. Stretton, who had a nervous dread of her dark-browed daughter's temper.

"Until Mrs. Hastings' brother comes home," admitted Mildred, a vivid blush staining her handsome face. "She promised to bring him to see us, but she is so exclusive, it is positively necessary for us to keep up every appearance of elegance. And here's Effie doing her best to upset it all. If she only would cultivate a little dignity——"

"I would rather cultivate cabbages," averred Effie, tipping her pert head on one side to straighten her hat, which had a habit of sliding about in every direction. "Never mind, Millie; it will give you a better chance when the hero puts in an appearance."

"But the rent," nervously began Mrs. Stretton.

"Bother the rent!" retorted Mildred, crossly, settling back comfortably on the sofa and paying no further attention to her mother. But Effie, trotting undignifiedly down the garden walk with a pan of seeds in one hand, a hoe in the other, and her hat sliding over one ear, paused a moment thoughtfully.

"Poor mammy, she's always worried!" she sighed. "I ought to do something to help her."

* * * * *

"Your sister seems to enjoy out-door exercise," remarked the exclusive Mrs. Hastings, who had honored the Strettons with an afternoon call.

"Yes," smiled Mildred, waving her fan with languid grace; "she is such a dear little romp—has such a fancy for amateur gardening, and——"

There was a sound of banging doors, a frisky clatter of light heels in the hall, and Effie's fresh voice was heard, clear and distinct:

"Mammy! Mildred! where are you? I've found a way to pay the rent. They are starting a pickle manufactory in that large building across the fields, and they're going to buy all the onions and gherkins in the neighborhood."

A demented-looking young lady, in an untidy white apron with one pocket ripped off, a cloud of light hair down her back and a newspaper in her hand, bounced into the drawing-room, never doubting that the voices she heard there were those of her mother and sister, but perceiving the visitor, dropped her paper and stood staring in dismay, and finally catching her sister's disconcerted looks and furtive frowns, she bit her lip and fled from the room with swift tears of mortification dimming her sunny eyes.

"But I'll grow all I can in the garden and make some money all the same," was the reflection that consoled her.

And thereafter Effie devoured treatises on vegetable culture, and dug, spaded, and raked her bit of garden indefatigably, and strange to say, in spite of her inexperience, her onions flourished and multiplied until the long beds were crowded with the smooth, shining roots. A freckled youth dwelling hard by was the delegate at whose hands the pickle-making establishment daily received baskets heaped with the results of the young lady's toil, while the fair gardener herself made weekly trips to the manufactory for collecting purposes.

The Autumn days had come and were fast departing, and one evening Effie came home with a glow in her cheeks and eyes.

"I—I've had an offer," she confessed, "from the manager of the pickle factory."

"For Heaven's sake!" wailed Mildred, dropping limply back in her chair, "has it come to this? I knew something dreadful would come of your low-bred tastes—but this is too much."

"But, Mill," urged Effie, "he's good, and handsome, and——"

"Don't tell me what he is! He is in a horrid, vulgar business—that is sufficient."

"Lady and gentleman for missus," announced the new servant-girl from the girl. "I tole 'em you's in the settin'room, 'n they could come in."

"You needn't mind us, you know," said Effie. Mr. Hastings, who stepped in to the room. "I've brought my brother Dick."

"Why, Mr. Hardy," fluttered Effie, turning pinker than a rosebud. "He's the manager of the pickle-factory," she explained to her astonished mother and sister.

"Certainly!" said the young man, holding Effie's hand tightly, "for a time. The real foreman met with an accident, and I being a partner in the affair, and the company could not find anyone to fill his place, I consented to accept it until he was able to do so, partly to keep it open for him, and partly because I was tired of laziness and felt a longing to be useful."

"And he gave all his salary to the poor man's family to support him until he could work again," broke in Mrs. Hastings.

"But I would be a foreman all my life rather than miss one experience I have had," said Mr. Hardy. "The question is, Mrs. Stretton—can I have Effie?"

"I think she has settled the question," answered Mrs. Stretton, with a gentle laugh, the worry fading out of her face for once.

"And poor mammy won't have to be bothered about rent any more, will she?" Effie asked, pleadingly of her lover.

"No, indeed! nor about anything else. And you won't have to earn your living any more by cultivating onions," with a kiss on the rosy mouth.

And Mildred realized that she had missed the chance she had watched for all the summer, while Effie—hoyden Effie—had planted onions, paid the rent, and won a sensible, appreciative husband.

A Torpedo Launch.

There are many interesting phases of life at Newport (writes a correspondent) upon which one may hope to find time to touch, but the diversified "happening things" of this week rightly claim present attention. Monday dawning clear and bright after a hot Sunday, showed the New York yacht squadron in the harbor, and promised a most interesting exhibition in the afternoon at the torpedo station, to which Captain Selfridge (an old Boston boy) had bidden a number of his friends, including, besides a large delegation from the aforesaid yachts, Chief Justice Waite and Mr. Justice Blatchford, of the supreme court, ex-Gov. Morgan, and a number of others. After a salute of seventeen torpedoes had been successfully fired, we had an opportunity of witnessing the most wonderful performances of the torpedo launch invented by Lieut. McLean, U. S. N., of which it seems to me that far too little notice has thus far been taken. Suppose we wish to attack a certain port, and the entrance to its harbor is thickly sown with the most deadly of modern fixed torpedoes. Naturally we wish to destroy those torpedoes, or at least break all the connections with them. Well, alongside a vessel a mile away from the objective point lies a harmless-looking little launch without a soul on board; and on the deck of said vessel stand two naval officers, one of them with his fingers on the keys of just such a little box as the late Jim Fisk used to call the heads of the departments of the Erie railway. "Go ahead," says the officer, looking through his glass. His comrade depresses the index finger, and the launch starts straight to its destination. "Starboard a little!" Down goes his forefinger. "Starboard it is," and, like a thing of life, the boat turns. "Steady! Port a little!" and again it obeys. This is not the Alaska, but it is making good time, and coming up to the line of torpedoes. Of course the enemy is firing at it, but it is a small object, and there are no lives to risk. "Stop her. Let go!" The finger is again on the button, and then there is one more command. "Fire!" There is a tremendous explosion, a volume of water rises into the air and—the road is open, and the admiral can make the signal for the advance. Something like this happened on Monday, on a reduced scale. There was no enemy to speak of, and everybody was so friendly that none could be improvised, but I do not see why this wonderful launch should not do in real war just as well as it did at Goat Island. Where the necromancy comes in is the handling of all the machinery by a single wire.

"The Mocking Bird."

According to a Washington correspondent an old attache of the White House relates the following incident: "The first time 'The Mocking Bird' was ever played, I believe, was by the Marine Band. It was during Buchanan's term, and his niece, Miss Harriet Lane, presided with a grace rarely equalled at the White House. The leader of the band had requested Miss Lane to allow him to dedicate the piece to her, and she had consented, inviting a large company to listen to the first rendition. The band leader, following the programme, first presented Miss Lane with a card, on which was painted a mocking bird and the inscription, 'To you.' The composition was played in splendid style, and I have never heard it since but what that scene was recalled. I can see Miss Lane bow her acknowledgments again and again, and almost hear the murmur of applause from the assemblage. The flavor of that evening hung about the band concerts for many a day."

Keeping off Intruders.

Prince Bismarck has hit upon a most effectual plan for keeping inquisitive intruders away from Varzin. He has issued a peremptory mandate forbidding all the inhabitants of the village and neighboring country to entertain any strangers whatever. So strictly enforced is this order that a newspaper correspondent recently was compelled to tramp to a town several miles away at midnight for the shelter that was refused him by the Chancellor's tenantry at Varzin.

Domestic Recipes.

President's Pudding.—Cut some slices of stale bread and dip each one in a custard made thus: Beat up one egg with a wine-glass full of milk and one-half ounce of powdered sugar, fry the bread quickly in butter, pile on a dish with layers of jam between the slices, pour a thin boiled custard over and sift some sugar, then serve.

Queen's Pudding.—One pint of fine sifted bread crumbs, one quart of milk, one cup of sugar, the yolks of four eggs, a piece of butter the size of an egg; bake until done (but do not allow it to become watery), and spread with a layer of jelly. Whip the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth with five tablespoonfuls of sugar and juice of one lemon, spread on the top, and brown lightly. This is good with or without sauce. It is very good cold, served with rich cream.

Pyramid Pound Cake.—One pound of white pulverized sugar, one pound of butter, one of flour, and ten eggs; bake in a dripping-pan one inch in thickness; cut when cold into pieces three and a half inches long by two wide, and frost tops and sides; form on the cake-stand in pyramid before the icing is quite dry by laying first in a circle five pieces with some space between them; over the spaces between these lay five other pieces, gradually drawing in the column, and crowning the top with a bouquet of flowers.

Light Paste for Tarts and Cheesecakes.—Beat the white of an egg to a strong froth; then mix it with as much water as will make three-quarters of a pound of fine flour into a stiff paste; roll it very thin, then lay the third part of half-pound of butter upon it in little bits; dredge it with some flour left out at first, and roll it up tight. Roll it out again, and put in the same proportion of butter; and so proceed till all is worked up.

A Nice Tomato Dish.—One of the nicest and simplest ways of dressing tomatoes is to cut them in halves, lay them in a baking-dish, cover each piece with some bread crumbs, a little pepper and salt, and some finely-chopped parsley, pour a little oil over, and bake in a good oven.

Macaroni with Tomatoes.—Take a quantity of tomatoes, cut them up, and remove from each the pips and watery substance it contains; put them into a saucepan, with a small piece of butter, pepper, salt, a bay leaf and some thyme; add a few spoonfuls of either stock or gravy; keep stirring on the fire until they are reduced to a pulp, pass them through a hair-sieve, and dress the macaroni with this sauce and plenty of Parmesan cheese freshly grated.

Storing Ice in Feather Pillows.—If you want to keep a lump of ice in warm weather, and have no cool place to put it, throw it into a stone pot, well covered, and put a couple of feather pillows securely fastened around the pot. It will last as ice should last, in this way, for two or three days. Feathers are a non-conductor of heat.

Yeast mixed with about one-eighth of pure glycerine will keep well for a long time, if placed in a cool cellar or chamber.

A very simple and efficient remedy for mosquitoes is tincture of Persian powder. If the powder is pure, a few drops of the tincture on the neck and hands will repel the most bloodthirsty mosquito from the thi nest skinned and most persistent of fishermen.

Socrates.

Great men with great ideas are misunderstood by our world. Socrates, who opposed the Sophists by using their own weapons, was confounded with these Sophists. Aristophanes, in his "Comedy of the Clouds," makes Socrates figure as the chief of Sophists. His teaching, which insisted more on living a moral life than the mere formal observance of the service of the gods, was said to be "corrupting in its influence upon the youth and undermining all true discipline and morality." He was accused of introducing new gods. He was tried, and on account of his haughty bearing condemned to death. He told his judges that so far from being condemned, he ought to be supported at public expense for the rest of his life as a benefactor of the state.

He braved his judges. Socrates could plead his own cause; his friends were true to him. "O, Athenians, had you waited a short time the thing would have happened without your agency, for you see my years; I am far advanced in life and near to death." "It is now time that we depart, I to die, you to live; but which has the better destiny is unknown to all except the God." Socrates would have been put to death on the morrow after his condemnation but that it was the first day of a festival. He waited thirty days.

During the thirty days which he spent in prison he was engaged with his friends in cheerful conversation. These companions gathered around him, listening to his every word. He talked of the life beyond. Socrates was an old man compared with his friends. He had seen the three-score years and ten. He was ready to give up life. He had ascended the hill—he had seen life from its height. No young hopes and ambitions filled his soul. The thirty days were up. The day he was to drink had come. The hour came, and with it the administrator of the poison. "How shall I take it?" asked Socrates. "Simply drink it, then walk round until a heaviness comes upon you. After this, lie down, and soon the poison will have done its work." This Socrates did. Soon the heaviness came, the body became cold, and the spirit quietly passed away. It was at sunset, and the rays of that setting sun still give glory to the prison of Socrates.—Rev. Albert Walkley.

Mountaineers and Turkeys.

The mode of hunting wild turkeys, adopted by the Blue Mountain hunters of Tennessee, is to "corn" a suitable part of the woods frequented by the birds—generally in old clearings.—Corning is simply the scattering of corn upon the ground and making choice feeding places, that the turkeys, which fly in flocks, can not long in disenvoring. When a hunter discovers the presence of a flock in his "field" he corns it, and generally feels certain that in time he will have every one of the turkeys bagged. When the clearing is scattered with the corn, the hunter takes a position in it from which he has a view of the feeding-place, but where he cannot be seen by the birds. The turkeys drop into the clearing with a great flutter and much gobbling by the males. The hunter picks out the bird he wishes to secure on the ground, and another at which he will shoot when they rise. He shoots the one on the ground and the other in the air. Large shot are used, and heavy charges of powder, as the feathers of the game are very close and the skin tough. A skilful hunter rarely fails to bring down his two birds, but a novice usually sees both birds take wing without any apparent damages from his charges. It is almost useless to try to get a shot at a flock of turkeys by flushing them, as their hearing and sight are extremely acute, and a flock always gets up and removes itself from harm's way long before the hunter is within gunshot.

But while so wily in that respect, they lack all semblance of shrewdness in visiting the "corned" places. No matter how large a flock is, it will continue being reduced in number by regularly visiting the place in the morning where it was shot at the evening before, and in the evening after having been shot into in the morning. This is kept up until only one bird comes to feed where all of its companions were killed.—Sometimes, when a pair of turkeys remain, the two will join another flock, and accompany it to the feeding place it has selected.

There are many pot-hunters among the Blue Mountain people who trap, snare, and net the turkeys, and the legitimate sportsmen destroy scores of their traps and nets every season. Hawks and foxes destroy many turkeys. The hawks are of immense size, some that have been killed measuring six feet from tip to tip. Wild turkeys weigh from eight to twenty pounds, and large numbers are sent from the Blue Mountain region to New York and Philadelphia markets. Sportsmen from the cities visit the region every season, and spend weeks at the cabins of the local hunters who serve as guides to the hunting-grounds.

Somnambulism in Dogs.

There is something peculiar about somnambulism when considered from a scientific and philosophical stand-point. The sleep-walker, it will be found, still retains a dim idea, even while he is asleep, of the condition of affairs when he went to sleep. For instance, if he leaves his clothes in a certain part of the room on retiring, he knows when he rises just where to find them, even in the dark. This is a question which opens up a wonderful field for physiological and mental research.

While young and giddy we became a somnambulist and excited a great deal of curiosity by our strange freaks during sleep, and this one question of the slumbering mind and its memory of facts existing prior to sleep was the most remarkable thing about it all to us. We puzzled over that a good deal. At night we would retire to rest and the next thing we would know we would wake up in the middle of a contiguous melon patch, and there would be two or three other somnambulists there in the same patch, and as much surprised as we were. Still there is the same truth staring us in the face. Every somnambulist there has through his sleep retained in his semi-conscious state a perfect recollection of where every article of his clothing was and how to get out of the up-stairs window without waking the old people.

Bye and bye the owner of the melon patch procured, at great expense, a large humorous bulldog, who was also a somnambulist. He walked in his sleep a good deal. That is why we quit. We didn't propose to descend to the level of the brute creation. We just said, if a bulldog wants to somnam, he can do so and we will leave the field to him.

We made this resolution one night just after we had plugged a watermelon. While stooping over in the act, we felt a pang of conscience and heard our suspenders break.

Perhaps the casual reader has never sat down on a buzz saw and felt himself gradually fading away. If so he does not know what it is to form the acquaintance of a somnambulist bulldog in the prime of life.

After that, somnambulism didn't have such a run in our family for awhile. We never slept so sound that we didn't remember places and objects that had made an impression on us prior to slumber, and that is why we say that there is something in this matter that scientists would do well to look into.—Boomerang.

A Petroleum Man's Protest.

In the flush days of petroleum, when thousands of gallons of the stuff went bubbling down the creeks because there was no storage for it, a stingy old Pitholer who had been drilling away for months suddenly tapped a reservoir and out came the oil at the rate of 200 barrels an hour. He had provided six empty barrels for such a contingency, and when these had been filled the dark liquid cut its way down the hillside in a roaring torrent. No one had tanks or barrels to spare, and the old man could only tear his hair as he stood by and realized that a fortune was oozing away from him. In the midst of his despair he noticed a stranger filling a pint bottle from the rushing stream. "Hold on—hold on, there!" he yelled as he ran down the hill—"this oil belongs to me!" "Yes, I know," replied the other, "but where 1,000 barrels are going to waste, you can spare me a pint, can't you?" "I—I suppose I can!" groaned the old man, "but I want you to understand that it's taking a mighty mean advantage of my misfortunes! Don't fill the bottle and grease your boots too!"

The Washington Monument.

Progress of the Work—The Signal Office Station

The white, tall, plain shaft of the Washington monument is foot by foot daily rising skyward, and its completion, in due course of time, is now assured, says the Washington Post. It is already a landmark visible from any part of Washington, and the inhabitants, after a generation of ridicule, are beginning to be proud of it. Apart from its unique character as an architectural wonder, modern science proposes to utilize it for the public benefit. The signal office expects to have a permanent station at its summit, and its officers say that observations of the air and atmospheric movements taken at an altitude of 550 feet will be of great value. Observations are taken, of course, at far greater altitudes than this, but the gradual slope of even the most precipitous mountains and the presence of large masses of rock near the observatory create surface currents, even on mountain heights, and interfere with the study of phenomena of the higher levels of the atmosphere. It has often been proposed to institute a series of experiments by means of captive balloons, but the expense of such work prevented the plans being carried out. At the time of the centennial it was proposed to erect a skeleton tower to the height of 1,000 feet in Fairmount park. Had this been done the signal officers would have utilized the observatory for the benefit of meteorological science, but the tower stopped at 300 feet. The signal officers say it would not be impracticable to build a tower 1,000 feet high or even higher, and that the erection of such a tower would be of great service. The monument is now 290 feet high. The original design contemplated a height of 500 feet, but at a meeting of the commissioners two years ago, when it was decided to resume work, it was voted to make the monument the loftiest artificial structure in the world. The commissioners examined the heights of all the noted monuments, towers, pagodas, spires, buildings, and flag-poles, and found that to safely distance all rivalry a height of 550 feet would be necessary. It was therefore determined to complete the shafts on this plan, and the drawings were modified to that end. What was the surprise and gratification of the commissioners to find subsequently that the new proportions of the shaft as now adopted were exactly those of an Egyptian obelisk.

A Reader's Complaint.

I have never wished that I had been born in some other century than the nineteenth. Our age, if not a picturesque one—and I think it has its picturesque aspects—is, without doubt, the most comfortable to live in, take it on the whole, the world has yet known. It seems to me that persons of rational mind and humane disposition cannot be too thankful to belong to it, for it is hard to see how such persons could ever have enjoyed life in earlier times as we of the latest days can. The world has certainly gone forward, and the feature of its progress that I chiefly rejoice in is its advance in humanity. The elder world—the world but a very little elder than our own—was such a terribly cruel one! The only objection to living in the present time that I know of is the increased quantity of things one must know, or would like to know. Eighteenth-century people didn't have to read Lecky's history of their times in four volumes, or a hundred thousand other books it now seems obligatory upon all cultivated persons to acquaint themselves with. Nowadays one is required to read a small library every year, if one would have even a smattering of knowledge on the various subjects that invite an intelligent man's interest. The specialists, in the abundance of whom we glory, carry investigations so far forward, each in his own line, that the general reader cannot hope to do more than accept a number of things at second hand, or be content to have no understanding of them at all. It is hard to resign one's self to ignorance of so many interesting matters, and yet that is what one seems driven to. One finds that the first thing to learn is "how much need not be known," which is perhaps a sort of sour-grapes wisdom, but apparently the only wisdom obtainable.—Atlantic.

Awful Warning.

At one of the Thomas concerts at Chicago, the electric lights suddenly went out, leaving the audience in perfect darkness for a few minutes. This was thought glorious by some of the young couples present, and over in the south-east corner of section B some one was heard to say in a suppressed undertone: "Je-whillikens, Susie, what the deuce have you got in your mouth?" Just then the light blazed up again, and a young man was noticed holding his hand over his mouth. A stream of blood was trickling through his fingers, and the expression on his face touched the observer's heart. His girl took something out of her mouth and put it in her pocket, looking pained and guilty. She led him quietly to the door, and they passed out. Young ladies should not wear their hairpins in their mouths. It is not the place for them, and a wound in the side of the jaw, made by coming suddenly and painfully in contact with a cruel two-pointed hairpin at a time when his heart is set on a moment of ecstatic bliss, might result in a coolness on the part of the young man which would be heart-breaking.—Milwaukee Sun.

Brace Up.

There is serious meaning in this expression. That wearied step, languid eye, and general feeling of lassitude come from "sickness." Be assured, a serious, and perhaps fatal disease is close in its wake. The system wants cleansing of impurities; the sluggish blood needs to be sent in swift and clear currents through the veins. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" will do this; it will give new vigor to the body, brightness to the eye, a glow to the countenance, and elasticity to the step. One Dollar a bottle. Every druggist has it. Dr. David Kennedy, proprietor, Rondout, N. Y.

TO THE AFFLICTED.

Since the introduction of Kellogg's Columbian Oil it has made more permanent cures and given better satisfaction on Kidney Complaints and Rheumatism than any known remedy. Its continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it known as a safe and reliable agent to employ against all aches and pains, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders. It acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering and often saving life. The protection it affords by its timely use on rheumatism, Kidney affection, and all aches and pains, wounds, cramping pains, cholera morbus, diarrhoea, coughs, colds, catarrh, and disorders among children, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. It is absolutely certain in its remedial effects, and will always cure when cures are possible. Call at C. A. Wright & Co.'s and get a memorandum book giving more full details of the curative properties of this wonderful medicine.

Employment for Ladies.

The Queen City Suspender Company, of Cincinnati, are now manufacturing and introducing their new Stocking Supporters for Ladies and Children, and their unequalled Skirt Suspenders for Ladies. None should be without them; our leading physicians recommend them, and are loud in their praise. These goods are manufactured by ladies who have made the wants of ladies and children a study, and they ask us to refer them to some reliable and energetic lady to introduce them in this county, and we certainly think that an earnest solicitation in every household would meet with a ready response, and that a determined woman could make a handsome salary and have the exclusive agency for this county. We advise some lady who is in need of employment to send to the Company her name and address, and mention this paper. Address Queen City Suspender Company, No. 179 Main Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Good News.

No more Chills and Ague in this section. Our Druggist is selling an article called "Ague Conqueror." It is about the only satisfactory preparation sold for the cure of Fever and Ague, Dumb Chills, Intermittent or Billious Fevers. The proprietor of the Ague Conqueror has used but little energy to make this medicine known, and yet its sales are immense in Ague Districts. It purifies the blood, Liver and other Secretory organs so effectually that the Chills do not return even when persons have had them for years. Entirely vegetable preparation. Price 50 cents and $1,00 per Bottle. Two doses will stop the chills.

WIT AND HUMOR.

The most exaggerated dispatches come by the fish line.

Ella Wheeler says that "love is sufficient." Ella has evidently been reading from Dr. Tanner.

It was a Detroit girl who married at 15 so as to have her golden wedding when it would do her some good.

The young woman who sneeringly remarks that men are all alike generally shows her sincerity by taking the first man that offers himself to her.

Miss Emma Abbott is said to have made $100,000 in stock speculation recently. Emma, if you can do that sort of thing, you just let opera alone.

There is one advantage in warm weather. At no other season of the year can you spread the butter on the children's bread so evenly and so thinly.

Says a cynical old lady: "Very handsome mothers are often proud of their very ugly babies. I wonder if butterflies are proud of their caterpillars."

No matter how handsome a young woman may be, when the right man comes along she is ready to yield the palm of her beauty, if he have the sense to ask it.

Takes a woman for ingenuity. A Cleveland girl had a new bonnet she wanted to show, and contrived to get herself called as a witness on a case she knew nothing about.

"Vegetables are ever so much better for a person than meat this hot weather," remarked the head of the family, as he reached for the last slice of beef and left an unsatisfactory ear of corn for the rest of the household.

A woman lately looked at a printing-press at work, turned to her companion, and in a most earnest manner inquired. "Well, Charley, an' thems the things as writes the papers. Be's them what they call editors?"

Yes, my boy, there are 53,200,000 people in this country. And you are only one of them. Just one. Think of that, once in a while, when you get to wondering what would happen to the world if you should die.

It may be interesting to the boys to learn that a mule can fight at both ends. A Louisville boy who tickled a mule about the mouth the other day was frightfully bitten in the hand by the enraged longears.

"I declare!" exclaimed Mrs. Tindice, "I never saw a gal like our Sary Jane. I worked eenamost two hull days on her bathin' dress, and don't you think she got it wringin' wet the fust time she put it on."

Substitution.—It was at a party. Miss Angelina had been persuaded to preside at the piano. "There," said Seraphina, as Angelina took up a piece of music, "she has taken a tune from the rack, and now she will put us all on it."

A trade journal gives directions for "preserving harness." Preserved, harness may be considered very palatable by those who like that sort of thing, but we don't want a bit in our mouth. —Norristown Herald.

"Yes, sir," says the oldest resident, "the first trip I made from Lowell to Boston was over the old canal, and I worked my passage on the canal-boat." "Worked your passage? How?" inquired his audience. "I led the horse," solemnly remarked the ancient mariner.

A certain self-styled authority on wit and humor says that there are but twenty kinds of jokes. We'll wager that we can send him a boy that will play over forty different practical jokes in half a day, unless he assassinates the boy before that time.

A fashion item says that the belle of the period now wears at her waist belt a little music box, faintly playing a single tune. We suppose this is to enable the gentleman to explain to anybody who comes along unexpectedly, that he was winding the box.

Recipe for Angels: "Mamma, what makes angels?" asked a little boy who had been reading of the heavenly inhabitants. The mother glanced out into the orchard, and, with a warning look, solemnly replied, "Unripe fruit, my dear."

Philadelphia mothers now tell their youngsters that if they are right good little boys until the bi-centennial celebration this fall, they will take them down to the river bank and let them play with the United States Navy.—Philadelphia News.

A sarcastic question may sometimes do duty for the severest of replies. "I never consider a dinner perfect without soup," said one man to another; "I always have soup when I dine." "And do you ever have anything else?" asked the other.

"Cain bottomed chairs!" repeated the countryman, studying the upholsterer's sign. "Cain bottomed chairs, did he? I want to know! Can't hardly believe it, but then these ere city chaps know. Won't our dominie be took back, though, when I tell 'im."

He Smoked.—Bill Snort, a Texas journalist, was about to get into a car on the Central railway, when the conductor, thinking the passenger might prefer the smoking car, asked: "Do you smoke?" "Don't care if I do," reaching out for the expected cigar.

"As for Mrs. So-and-so," remarks one of the guests in a salon where they are passing their friends under review, "her worst fault is that she is bored wherever she goes." "Her lack of selfishness is a still greater defect," says another, "for she insists in not being the only bored person in the company."

A Chicago man came home very early the other evening, kicked his wife and children into the street, locked the door, and then went to bed. His wife made no complaint, but went to a relative's house, and with beaming face exclaimed: "Thank fortune, I know where my husband is this night, anyway."

Lady Visitor—"Your boy looks very bad, Mrs. Jones; what's the matter?" Mrs. Jones—"Yes, ma'am, he be very bad; an' what's more, the doctor has made him worse. I'm sure we poor people need to pray with all our hearts, 'From all false doctrin, good Lord, deliver us.' I never saw its meaning before."

A certain married man got up out of his bed one night and took a new red coverlet and lay down upon it on the floor. In the morning when he got up his wife gave a yell of fright, for on the day before she had been reading of the tattooed man, and for a moment she thought he had broken into her chamber. That new red coverlet is now for sale at a second hand store.

Chance for a Stake.—They were burying a man who had died in Southern Indiana, when a tramp leaned over the fence and inquired, "Was he a statesman?" "No." "Orator?" "No." "Great inventor, or anything of that sort?" "No; he was simply an honest man." "Oh, that's it, eh? Why don't his widder take the body over to Chicago and put it on exhibition, and make a stake?"

An Augusta man, who has been enjoying a few weeks' leisure at Reed's Neck, Boothbay, recently donned his rubber boots, swung a pail over his shoulder on a hoe, and started out at high tide to dig clams. Not meeting with good success, he approached a settler's cabin, and inquired where he could find the juicy bivalves. The squatter eyed him keenly for a moment, and then remarked: "Young man, I don't know much about city customs, but if you want to dig clams in a flood tide you'll have to leave these parts to do it."

A Rockland woman has made a quilt containing 3,698 pieces. It is unnecessary to say that this Rockland woman is nigh on to a hundred, never wore glasses, milks all the cows on the farm and makes all the butter, besides doing her housework, helping in the hay-field, going to market every other day, and getting through a thousand and one other duties in the course of twenty-four hours. It is unnecessary to mention these trifling things. Of course this Rockland woman is no exception to the general rule in the innumerable race of patch-workers.

Don't Trust Them.

When you feel badly, and you have pains here and there in your body that you don't know how to account for, it is the most foolish policy in the world to take the advice of people who say: "Oh, there's nothing the matter with you. Let yourself alone and you will come out all right." These folks know nothing about it, and may be trifling with your life. You may have kidney or liver trouble. Send right out to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," and then you will be all right, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

Rough on Sam.

Sam Rideout is an Austin clerk. He is personally not very attractive, and his morals are of a very inferior quality. One of Sam's peculiarities is to use mercantile terms and expressions, no matter what subject is being discussed. He and a few friends were talking about clergymen and doctors the other day, and one of them asked Sam who his family doctor was.

"Dr. Dosem supplies us with all we need in the physical department, and Parson Soothem furnishes us a full line of piety goods," said Sam.

"Look here, Sam," remarked Gilhooly, "if Dr. Dosem is responsible for your looks, and Parson Soothem furnished you with your morals, all I've got to say is, that they have shoved a lot of second-hand goods off on you, and they're badly damaged besides. You ought to deal, from now on, with first-class houses. You have been swindled outrageously. To look at you, one would suppose your good looks and manners were of home manufacture."

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Geo. C. Clarke, of Port Dalhousie, Ontario, states that she had been confined to her room for a long time with that dreadful disease, Consumption. The doctors said she could not escape an early grave, but fortunately she began taking Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and in a short time was completely cured. Doubting ones, please write Mrs. Clarke, and be convinced. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co.

John Bright's Portrait for Chicago.

George Jacob Holyoke, in a letter to a friend, just before starting for America, wrote: "I am taking with me a full-length, nearly life-size, autotype portrait of Mr. Bright, which I have had framed. It was done for the use of a sculptor who has made, or is to make, a marble statue of Mr. Bright for Birmingham. The expression of the face is finer than that of Millais' painting, as it has the compressed lip and defiant look peculiar to the orator when the cry goes forth in the corridors of the house, 'Bright is up.' It is not possible to reproduce it, as time has changed the countenance. I wonder how he came to put on the expression as he dislikes sitting. The same expression has never appeared in any other picture. I told Mr. Bright I was going to take it. He said the Americans would never see him. 'Therefore,' I answered, 'they will the more eagerly see you in this, and as though they were here.' My intention is to present it to my friend Mr. James Cariton, of the Chicago and Alton railroad, who will, I hope, give the citizens of Chicago, and perhaps other places, an opportunity of looking at it. The autotype is by Mayall, formerly of Philadelphia."

An Explanation.

The delicate, flowery and lasting fragrance of Floreston Cologne explain why it is such a favorite with the ladies.

Why Should They.

No man or woman can do satisfactory work when the brain is dull, the nerves unsteady, the system relaxed and they feel generally wretched. Why should anybody drag through their work in this condition, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic will at a moderate cost give them the strength and will to perform their duties satisfactorily.

Arabi Bey will not take a place in history as a great soldier, but as a high-toned robber he will rank with Arabi Hubbell.

John U. Harkness, of Rollin, has received the Republican nomination for Representative in the third district of this county.

President Arthur's son is to be married in a few weeks, and lots of handsome widows are wondering why the young man should be so much smarter than his father.

Ben Butler is running for Governor of Massachusetts for the fourth time, and even with the big party majority which the Republicans enjoy in that state they are growing uneasy.

The free trade sentiment is growing. New free trade leagues are organizing every week. The latest accession is the Lenawee County Free Trade and anti-Monopoly League organized last week at Adrian.

Alf. James, for Sheriff, is a first-class nomination. It will be a "nip and tuck" race between him and Charley Bidwell, and many men in this vicinity will wish they could vote both tickets on sheriff.

Political side-shows do not flourish this year. People do not fancy "voting in the air," and they are settling down upon one side or the other. It will be a square fight between a stalwart administration and those opposed to it.

The Union County ticket is a good one. The candidates are, nearly all of them, men who are well known throughout the county and will be recognized as well fitted for the places they are selected to fill. Although the party majority is with the Republicans in this county, it is among the possibilities that some of the candidates on the Union ticket may be chosen. This is an off-year, and the old parties are getting terribly stirred up in many sections of the country.

The local nominations have been nearly all completed, and there is one very pleasing feature about the political situation in this county. The nominations are so unexceptionably good on both sides that the Adrian newspapers will have no excuse for waging a mud-slinging campaign. Othello's occupation will be gone. Each party organ can say what it chooses in favor of its own candidates, but it can say nothing truthfully derogatory to the opposition. For all of which the average voter will return hearty thanks.

The two parties in New York have placed their state tickets in the field. The Republican nominee for Governor, Judge Folger, is an admirable man so far as his personal fitness for the office is concerned, but the machine methods used to effect his nomination and to defeat Cornell to gratify Roscoe Conkling's revenge have alienated many Republicans. The nomination of Grover Cleveland, of Buffalo, has united all the Democratic factions, and that party now presents a united front for the first time in six years. The outlook in New York seems to favor a Democratic victory this fall.

Here is a good political platform clipped from one of our exchanges. These principles faithfully carried out in legislation would reduce taxation and relieve the people of many burdens:

Every man has the right to exchange the fruits of his labor according to his own judgment.

The restriction of that right by legislation is an infringement of personal liberty.

Congress has no authority to dictate the management of private business, nor to compel well directed industry to pay the loss of unprofitable experiments.

Taxation for the support of the government is necessary. Taxation which brings the government no revenue, but serves only to lay the whole people under tribute to favored classes, is a violation of the spirit of Democracy.

IMPORTANT RAILROAD NEWS.

Something About Vanderbilt, the Canada Southern, and the New "Nickle Plate" Line.

The Evening News of Monday contains a lengthy article indicating that the Canada Southern road has been bought by parties in the interest of the Wabash system. The News says:

"Six years ago or more, when Canada Southern stock was next to valueless and it looked as though the line would go into the hands of a receiver, the stockholders presented W. H. Vanderbilt with one-half the entire stock of the company, which is $15,500,000, on the promise that he would take the active management of it and make it a prominent link of his through lines. He

"BOOMED" IT FOR TWO YEARS,

raised the stock from 18 to 89, and then sold 60,000 of his 75,000 shares to a Dutch syndicate at that figure. It is also stated that a short time after the sale to the Amsterdam syndicate Vanderbilt disposed of his remaining stock in small parcels. He has kept control of the road during the past three years by voting the proxies of the Holland syndicate, under first one promise, then another. They have been very restless all this time, however, at the absence of dividends, and just before the last election threatened to TURN OVER THEIR PROXIES TO JAY GOULD.

To prevent this Vanderbilt made a trip to Europe, and as a last resort paid these special stockholders a dividend of one and a half per cent. out of the earnings of the road, but which funds railroad men claim were sadly needed in improving the line and for necessary improvements. Within six months the Canada Southern, like other lines, has suffered for want of business, and this has again

AROUSED THE HOLLANDERS TO ACTION.

They sent a committee of two to this country some time ago with power to sell the stock or take any action they might think proper. Rumor has it that this committee has been negotiating with various parties in the east for several weeks, and that Vanderbilt has done nothing to prevent the road passing from his control. A telegram in this morning's Cincinnati Enquirer reiterates the report of the sale. Local railroad officials outside of the Canada Southern consider the rumored sale probable, but can't account for the outlay now being made in the construction of the Essex Centre cut-off, the Canada Southern itself having no money for the purpose. In explanation of

of the Canada Southern, wise guessers state that he will soon control the "gilt edge"—New York, South Shore and Chicago—running from Buffalo to Chicago almost parallel with the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, which will furnish him all the western connections he desires."

Whether the Canada Southern is slipping from Vanderbilt's control or not it is impossible to say at present, but we can hazard our reputation as a prophet on this statement: Vanderbilt is about as likely to be struck by lightning as he is to control the new "Nickle Plate" line to Chicago. That line is controlled by a heavy moneyed syndicate which has a large railroad system of its own, and it cannot be bought up or driven from the track by any clique whatever. It controls the cheapest and most direct line from Buffalo to Chicago; it has an outlet over the Ontario South Shore line to New Yory city; it controls the Ohio Central and the Hocking Valley coal fields, and within twelve months it will have a feeder running into the lumber regions of Michigan. All this smoke is probably raised to head off the Toledo & Milwaukee Railway enterprise. A similar movement two years ago produced that effect, but the same dodge will not work a second time. The T. & M. road is now in the hands of men who mean business, and who cannot be bought by outside influences. The T. & M. will be built soon, it will be controlled by the "Nickle Plate" system, and will be a part of the best trunk line between Chicago and the Atlantic. This road cannot be headed off or bought up by the cook-and-bull-stories of Vanderbilt's agents at Detroit and elsewhere.

That a Michigan feeder for the Nickel Plate will be constructed within the next twelve months we have no doubt, and we feel sanguine that the old T. & M. line through Tecumseh will be adopted.

Since the above was in type we find the following item in the Chicago Tribune. It corroborates our view that the Nickle Plate is not and cannot be in the market. That combination is engaged in buying and building railroads, not selling them. And Vanderbilt is no more likely to buy this line than he is to buy the Grand Trunk:

It transpires that the principal reason why Gould bought the Hannibal and St. Joe was to keep it out of the hands of the "Nickel-plate," which has been trying to gobble up the road. It is stated that the owners of the owners of the "Nickel-plate" offered to the parties holding the Duff stock forty-five cents per share for the same. Gould heard of this, and not desiring the "Nickle-plate" folks to get it, he opened negotiations for the purchase of the stock, and offered forty-two cents for the same. The holders of the stock preferred to accept forty-two from the Gould syndicate and let that combination have it. The "Nickel-plate" people could have utilized the the Hannibal and St. Joe to excellent advantage, and could have formed a line that would become a most serious competitor with the Wabash from the lakes to the Missouri river. As is generally known, the "Nickel-plate" people now control the Lake Erie and Western road, which gives them a continuous line from Buffalo to Bloomington, Ill.; from Bloomington they could easily build a connection to Hannibal over the right of way of the Hannibal, St. Joe and Chicago, thus completing the through line to Kansas City. The consummation of this scheme would have greatly strengthened the "Nickel-plate," and would have placed the Wabash in a bad position.

The following items from yesterday's Cleveland Leader will be of interest to our readers in this connection:

NICKEL PLATE APPOINTMENTS.

All the preparations of the officers of the New York, Chicago and St. Louis are made with a view to regularly opening the road for local business at least on the 15th of next month. Clerks under Superintendent Dwight are making out the time-cards; General Passenger Agent Monett is distributing tickets, and General Freight Agent Spriggs is preparing tariff sheets.

The chief representatives of freight departments in outside cities will have the title of Commercial Agents, and their authority will have a wider range than is generally accorded to foreign freight agents. General Freight Agent Spriggs announced several important appointments yesterday. W. B. Thurber, who has had a wide range of experience with the Bee Line and other roads, will be Commercial Agent at Cleveland. He is well known here among business men and shippers. The local freight agent for Cleveland has not yet been appointed, but will be within a few days.

At Chicago, N. A. Skinner, formerly of the Grand Trunk and Great Western, will be the Nickel-plate's Commercial Agent. Having held the same position in that city, his acquaintance, coupled with his business ability, will make him a most valuable man. J. E. Lockwood, now with the B. & O. in a similar capacity, will be local freight agent at Chicago.

The Nickel-plate expects to get considerable business from Toledo, and have appointed as Commercial Agent at that point Mr. D. Blinn, formerly with the Wabash and latterly with the Great Western. He stands high with the traders of Toledo, and is acquainted with every important shipper in the Southwest.

THE NEW SENEY ROAD.

It is now an assured fact that the Michigan & Ohio Railroad will be built. The route, from present indications, will traverse the line surveyed in 1879, and known as the Toledo & Milwaukee road, running via Tecumseh, Addison, Marshall and other thriving towns and villages in Michigan, to Allegan, which will be the western terminus of the road. At that point it will connect with the Chicago and West-Michigan Railway.

The eastern terminus of the road has not yet been fully determined, although the probability is that it will be independent of other roads, and located at a point on the Maumee River, near the new Wheeling & Lake Erie bridge. Should this be the case the road will have a length of about 140 miles. Work will be begun immediately. Eight engineering parties are now in the field, and the company confidently expect to have between seventy and eighty miles of road completed this winter.

The line referred to above as being surveyed in 1879 was surveyed under the direction of Chief Engineer Latcha of the Nickel-plate, and who now has charge of and is proceeding with the construction of the road. It was incorporated under the name of the Toledo & Milwaukee Railroad, and is still the Toledo & Milwaukee Railway, and according to present plans will be completed within a year.

The October Century.

Unusually varied and interesting are the contents of the October Century, which closes the first year of the magazine under the new name. Most noteworthy, perhaps, are the two portraits of Abraham Lincoln, which have never before been published. The larger of these, the frontispiece of the magazine, engraved by Cole, is a fine copy of an ambrotype which was made two days after Lincoln was nominated in 1860. The smaller one is a copy of the last photograph for which Lincoln sat, and was taken on the balcony of the White House six days before the President's death. These remarkable portraits enable us to see the great change which was wrought in the features of Lincoln between 1860 and 1865. With the portraits are published letters giving the history of the originals, and a paper entitled "How Lincoln was Nominated," by Frank B. Carpenter, who throws new light on the inside history of that memorable contest.

Other articles of practical or timely value are E. V. Smalley's third paper on the New Northwest, which describes the life and natural features of the country between the Rockies and the Cascade Ranges, including the new wheat-fields of Idaho and Washington; an admirable statement of "The Growth of the United States," by Francis A. Walker, the Superintendent of the last census; and an account by Judge Farman, late Consul General at Cairo, of his "Negotiations for the Obelisk," with much that bears on the troubles in Egypt of which the present rebellion is the grand sequel.

THE annual renting of pews in the M. E. Church will take place on Wednesday, October 4, at 3 P. M., 1882. As every available pew in this church was rented last year, it is very desirable that those desiring pews shall report promptly. The Ladies' Aid Society will furnish supper on the same occasion in the lecture room. Tickets to supper, 10 cents. Supper from 6 to 9 P. M. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Julia A. Moore, the sweet singer of Michigan, has been heard from again. She has another babe.

The Greenville school children are not yet in school. They have to wait until their elders can settle a quarrel about a teacher.

Membrino, the horse stolen from the Jackson fair grounds a few nights ago, has been found, having been abandoned by the thieves.

Gov. Jerome has appointed ex-Railroad Commissioner S. S. Cobb, of Kalamazoo, state prisoner inspector in place of L. W. Lovell, resigned.

The temperance folks of Benton Harbor are urging that no liquors be sold at the coming county fair. This will be a boom for the city saloonists.

The people of La Grange, Ind., offer the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan railroad company $25,000 if it will deflect its line from the Sturgis route to La Grange.

The omnibus of the Commercial house at Lowell was blown up one night last week. Some one had touched off a jug of powder in it, with malice aforethought (and a fuse.)

The receipts of the state fair this year are given as $22,921.50. Ten to one they won't read so large when the committee goes about seeking bonus for a location next year.

The inquest upon the body of Mrs. Frank Hooks, of Howell, who died Wednesday, has been adjourned. Her stomach has been sent to Ann Arbor for analysis of its contents.

The churches have done well out of the Jackson fair. The Methodists made $1,400, the Baptists $1,200 and the Napoleon church $675. They sold dinners and lunches.

A burglar who tried to rob the Jackson Citizen office fell into a barrel of ink. If the boys can only get his "form" they will "lock him up" and see what kind of an "impression" he makes.

The fifth annual convention of the Woman's christian temperance union of the first congressional district of Michigan will be held at Flat Rock, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Four boys aged about 12 years, sons of well known and respectable people of St. Johns, have been detected in stealing money. They are alleged to have raised $300 or more. The matter was settled up without much publicity and young America breathes free once more.

There are now 107 scholars at Orchard Lake military academy, and only room for three more boys. This is the highest number ever reached at that institution. Lieut. Satterlee, the new instructor in military science, takes hold of the work ably, and the school work is progressing very finely in all departments.

The manufacturers' association of Three Rivers is an organization having for its object the fostering of schemes for the growth and prosperity of the village. The association is wide awake, spills plenty of printers' ink, and keeps pace with the progress of the day. Consequently Three Rivers is booming and healthful, and people seeking business locations are invited in.

The officers elect of the state agricultural society are as follows: President, Henry Fralick, Grand Rapids; secretary, Joe C. Sterling, Monroe; treasurer, A. J. Dean, Adrian. Executive committee—J. M. Sterling, Monroe; Wm. Ball, Hamburg; J. L. Mitchell, Jackson; A. O. Hyde, Marshall; W. H. Cobb, Kalamazoo; E. W. Rising, Davidson Station; Philo Parsons, Detroit; John Lessiter, Jersey; Wm. Chamberlain, Three Oaks.

The boiler of a Chicago and Northwestern railway engine bound for Menominee, and hauling a passenger train, exploded while en route, near Oconta, Wis., a few days ago, blowing the engineer and fireman into the ditch, but not disabling the trucks, so that the train proceeded safely until its momentum was exhausted. It is said that the passengers knew nothing of it until the train stopped.

The fifty-sixth annual session of the Michigan Baptist Association was held at Clarkston, September 19 and 20. This association comprises thirty-three churches, including the several Baptist churches of Detroit. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. C. E. Harris, of Port Huron, after which Rev. S. Finn, of Royal Oak, was elected moderator; W. P. Grow, of Waterford, treasurer, and C. E. Harris clerk. The report from the churches was very gratifying. There were reported 21 pastors, 236 baptisms and an entire membership of 3,317, making a net gain of 243. All the sessions of the body were interesting and profitable, consisting of presentations of the denominational benevolent agencies, discussions of practical topics connected with church work, miscellaneous business, and closing Wednesday evening with a rousing Sunday School meeting, conducted by W. H. Brearley, of Detroit.

What It Did for an Old Lady.

Coshocton Station, N.Y., Dec. 28, '78.—Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case, a lady of over seventy years, had been sick for years, and for the past ten years has not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbor's, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use. W. B. Hathaway,
Agt. U. S. Ex. Co.

THERE will be a meeting of the Universalist Parish to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock at the church, to vote upon the sale of one of the church lots.

CANNOT Tecumseh sustain a lecture course during the coming winter? If anything is to be done in this direction the work should be begun without delay.

WE acknowledge the receipt of a complimentary ticket to the Morenci fair. It is not probable that we can attend, but we wish them abundant success just the same.

THE Allen Bros., of Cambridge, use six teams to haul their peaches to market, most of which are drawn to Jackson. They have sold nearly one hundred loads this season.

THE Hillsdale Standard has donned a new dress and changed to an eight page six column folio. That's right. The old blanket style of newspaper is rapidly going out of fashion.

WE expect our new switch-board with fifty annunciators this week. We can then accommodate several new subscribers in Tecumseh and Clinton who have been waiting several days for the privilege of saying "hello."

MIKE HAMMILL of Franklin was up before Justice McKinnon last Saturday for drunkenness, and was sentenced six months to Ionia. He has since got bail for his good behavior and hence his visit to the house of correction will be postponed.

SURVEYORS are going over the T. & M. line between Marshall and Tecumseh, making estimates of the cost of preparing the road bed. When their report shall be submitted, the syndicate will then soon decide upon the definite location of the line.

SAM RAPPLEYE, of Macon, rolled two mammoth watermelons into our office last week and the boys have been dining on watermelon ever since. Mr. Rappleye displays good judgement in putting his watermelons where they will do the most good.

THE Michigan Universalist State Convention will be held at Marshall next week, commencing on Tuesday at 10:30 A.M., and closing on Thursday evening. A full delegation will attend from the Tecumseh parish. The occasional sermon this year will be delivered by Rev. H. Shepard, of this village.

JOHN R. CLARK is speaking to large crowds in Brantford, Ontario, this week. He will speak in Flint on Saturday, Oct. 1st, and at the Morenci Fair, in this county, on the 4th of October, at which last named place he will deliver his To and Fro for the 197th time.

WE refer to the prospectus of the Cincinnati Times in another column. The old reliable Weekly Times has an army of friends, which is yearly augmented in numbers. To its old patrons no word of commendation is necessary, and to those who have never taken it, we say: Try it one year.

WE have received a copy of the descriptive pamphlet issued by the Mineral Springs Co., of St. Clair, Mich. These springs are gaining a fine reputation, and the hotel connected therewith, the Oakland, is first-class in all its appointments. The water of these springs is said to be a great panacea in many chronic complaints. Any one wishing a copy of the pamphlet can obtain one by addressing "The Oakland," St. Clair, Mich.

BOSTON OPERATIC MINSTRELS.—The troupe of artists played before a delighted audience last night and proved themselves to be a combination of no second rate. They are fully up to and in many respects ahead of the high standard to which minstrelsy in this country has attained. Their clog dancing artists are par excellence, and as singers the company has but few equals in the country. They give their closing entertainment this evening.—Toledo, O., Evening Bee, Sept. 13, 1882.

MORENCI is going to have a lecture course this winter.

ROBERT STRETCH is at home from Columbus on a short visit.

THE Baptist Sunday School held their annual picnic last Saturday.

REV. R. S. PARDINGTON will preach next Sabbath morning on "Waiting" and in the evening on "Going."

COMPANY C, 1st Regt. M. S. T. will hold its regular election of commissioned officers Thursday evening, Oct. 5th, 1882.

THE P. O. building is receiving a new coat of paint, and other inside improvements preparatory to putting in the new boxes.

FRANK DAVIDSON'S boy, Guy, who was seriously hurt by a runaway a few days ago, is convalescing, and will soon be able to take another drive.

H. W. STEVENS and John Smyth are going into the apple business. Mr. Sam. G. Smyth, John's brother, will hereafter take his place in the HERALD office.

OUR friend, Mat Blosser, of Manchester, has turned another journalistic mile-post and started out on his sixteenth volume. Long may the Enterprise continue to prosper.

THE Ann Arbor Register has been enlarged to eight columns and the price fixed at $1.00 per year. The Register has greatly improved under its new management, and is rapidly becoming one of the best papers in the state.

BLISSFIELD is all torn up with excitement over the discovery of gold in that village. Last Friday while laborers were digging a drain near Cannon's shop on the west side, they struck a stratum of clay containing particles of gold. Moses Eddy, an old miner, says it is undoubtedly gold. Andrew Fisher, a jeweler there, examined a specimen and pronounced it genuine gold. Whether it will yield enough to pay working is a problem as yet undecided, but there is probably no question as to the existence of the precious metal in that particular clay bed.

The Adrian Record says: Mr. A. H. Briggs, in presenting Jay Hoag to the republican convention as a candidate, said that Mr. Hoag was a Quaker, and he (Briggs) did not know of a Quaker who was a democrat. We refer Mr. Briggs to the venerable Robert Wooden, democratic candidate for coroner of this county. If the brethren are going to give Mr. Hoag a lift for his religion, let them "buck up" some votes also for Wooden.

Unless we have been sadly misinformed, Father Wooden has been a Universalist preacher for the past 40 years.

THE Academy of Music was re-opened last night by Briggs' Operatic Minstrels. There was a good house. The performance was pleasing and the singing of the Electric Quartette was very good indeed. The singers were recalled several times. The jig dancing of Carmody and Mack also elicited much applause. The old timer, N. B. Shimer, convinced the audience that he had not lost his ancient cunning; Frank West's stump speech was decidedly good, and the acrobatic song and dance and burlesque circus were respectively very good and very funny. Altogether the opening of the season at the Academy may be said to have been sufficiently successful. The minstrels will give another performance this evening.—Hamilton, Ont., Evening Spectator, Sept. 6, '82.

Early Closing.

We, the undersigned, agree to close our respective places of business each day at 7:30 P.M., from Monday, October 9, 1882, until April 1, 1883, except Saturday nights and the week preceeding Christmas:

DEATH OF HON. F. C. BEAMAN.

Again is Lenawee county called to mourn the loss of one of her truest and noblest citizens. After several months of feeble health and a final struggle of a few days with the grim Angel, Judge Beaman, of Adrian, departed this life at one o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Fernando C. Beaman was born in Chester, Vermont, June 28th, 1814, his father being a farmer, who assisted in the suppression of Shay's rebellion in 1787. When he was only five years old, his parents moved to Franklin county, New York, where the years of his childhood and youth were spent. Like most of the other young men of that day who attained an education, he taught school for ten terms, and in the intervening time attended the Franklin Academy, at Malone, where William A. Wheeler, late Vice President of the United States, was a classmate of his. In 1836, after completing the full curriculum of study in the Franklin academy, young Beaman went to Rochester, and the next year entered the law office of Haight and Elwood. He subsequently read law with William S. Bishop, a prominent member of the bar at Rochester.

In 1838 he came to Michigan and studied law in the office of C. A. Stacy at Tecumseh. He was admitted to the bar in 1839, and first settled at Manchester. The next year he returned to Tecumseh and formed a law partnership with Judge Stacy, the firm name being Stacy & Beaman, where he resided until 1843, when he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney of Lenawee County by Gov. Barry, and removed to Adrian. He was twice re-appointed to this position, holding it for six years. During this time he formed a law partnership with Hon. A. R. Tiffany, and later he organized the firm of Beaman, Beecher & Cooley, which at once assumed the position of one of the leading law firms of southern Michigan. He was elected Judge of Probate in 1856. In 1860 he was elected to Congress in the old Second district, and was re-elected for four consecutive terms, serving in Congress ten years, during the eventful decade from 1860 to 1870. In 1872, and again in 1876, he was elected Judge of Probate, but he resigned before the close of his official term, by reason of his declining health.

The deceased was a lawer of keen legal judgment and untiring industry, and during the years of his active practice he commanded a large and lucrative business.

In politics he was originally a Free Soil Democrat, and upon the organization of the Republican party in 1854 he became an active leader of the new party, and served as an elector on the Fremont and Dayton ticket in 1856. His term of ten years' service in Congress was an eventful one, and the impress of his legal intellect and practical good sense was left upon many acts of national legislation. He was a grand representative of the old school, in which personal honesty, official rectitude and political principle were the guiding stars of public men, and the stepping stones to preferment.

In his personal relations he was an indulgent parent, a most devoted husband, and a man whose brilliant social qualities gave him a commanding position in the community which was honored by his residence. His death, although for some time expected, will be sincerely felt not only in the city of his residence, but throughout the State. A noble man and a faithful public servant has been gathered to his fathers.

UNION COUNTY CONVENTION.

The Democrats and Greenbackers Nominate a Joint County Ticket.

The Democratic and Greenback County Convention assembled on Thursday last at Dean's opera house in the city of Adrian.

Both conventions met and organized before dinner and each appointed conference committees to wait upon the other with a view to the nomination of a union county ticket.

The Democrats named the following persons upon this conference committee:

J. W. Bradner, Clinton; C. L. Lowe, Ridgeway; Alfred James, Tecumseh; Geo. Bascom, Rome; John Rentz, Blissfield.

The Greenbackers elected D. C. Richards, Cambridge; Japheth Cross, Adrian; Jacob Russell, Cambridge; J. W. Helme, Adrian; Chas. Kanoer, Raisin.

The joint committee agreed upon the following division of the county offices.

Democrats—Sheriff, prosecuting attorney, treasurer, two circuit court commissioners, register, coroner.

Greenbackers—State senator, coroner, county clerk, surveyor.

This report was submitted to the two conventions and adopted, and each proceeded to nominate a portion of the ticket in accordance therewith.

The Democrats put up the following:

Sheriff—Alf. James, Tecumseh.
Prosecuting Attorney—L. H. Salsbury, Hudson.
Treasurer—Frank Teachout, Rome.
Register—W. C. Hulett, Adrian.

Resolved, By the Democracy of Lenawee county in convention assembled, that we reaffirm and endorse the principles of political faith, enunciated and set forth in the platform adopted by the last Democratic State Convention.

Resolved, That we are especially and emphatically in favor of only an much restriction upon absolute free trade as shall be necessary to raise sufficient funds for an economical administration of the government, and we denounce protection as such, as being unnecessary, and having for its only effect the promoting of the interests of few at the expense of the many.

The two conventions then met in joint session, ratified the joint ticket and then adjourned. The ticket is generally regarded as a strong one.

TELEPHONE TALK.

The Monday's Free Press contains the following, which illustrates that the telephone is reaching out into new fields of activity:

Saturday morning Supt. Jackson, of the Telephone Exchange, tested the new device invented by A. T. Hill, foreman at M. S. Smith & Co.'s establishment, for the transmission of time by telephone from Ann Arbor to this city. The device consists of a peculiarly constructed clock to which is attached an ordinary telephonic sounder and by which the pulsations of the clock are delivered against a telephonic transmitter. The eccentric connections are so arranged that in delivering the time, the sounder gives single strokes every second for one minute, and for the minute immediately following double strokes are sounded each second. In this way most accurate records are given, the accepted time being taken at the sounding of the last stroke in the second minute.

The clock has been erected at Ann Arbor by M. S. Smith & Co.—Mr. Hill having been at work at the device nearly a year—for the purpose of securing means whereby they can furnish at noon each day, to whoever desires it, the exact time. Connections will be made with all of the engine houses in the city and with many jewelry establishments in neighboring cities. The tests made by Mr Jackson Saturday were exact, there being not the slightest variation in the records made.

DIED.

GILMORE.—Died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Francisco Dason, on the 19th inst., Susan Gilmore, after a long and painful illness.

The deceased was born in Central N. Y. in August, 1810; hence at the time of her death she had passed a little more than her seventy-second year. Her long life was remarkable for its shadows. At the age of twelve death deprived her of a father's strong protection and tender care. Added to the sorrows of this painful bereavement were the painful experiences of extreme poverty. Though entering another family by the 2d marriage of her mother, her life's burdens were not materially lightened, for she occupied the position of a step-daughter and received the treatment generally given to the child of a penniless mother. Marrying at the age of twenty-eight she immigrated with her husband to the new state of Michigan, settling in Leoni, Jackson county. She experienced the hardships and struggles of the pioneer, and in the midst of it all was twice a mourner at the grave of her offspring, and eventually suffered the severest of all afflictions—the death of her husband. After three years of widowhood she married Asa Gilmore, with whom she lived twenty-five years. His death occurred Sept. 12th, 1874. Ever since the beginning of her second widowhood she has been a sufferer from disease. Last May her malady became aggravated; it has baffled all medical skill. At last the end has come, and her weary spirit is released from her painracked body. The pain of her final illness was relieved so far as it lay in the power of her devoted children. In early girlhood she professed faith in Christ and united with the Baptist church. For more than thirty years she has walked in the fellowship of the Baptist church of this village. Her pastor, Rev. C. E. Couley, preached her funeral sermon, taking Isaiah 35:10 as his text. At last the shadows of her life have faded away.

In Memory of Andrew Coryell.

Dear aged pilgrim, thou hast gone,
Thy sun set in the West,
Thy battles fought, thy victory won,
And thou hast gone to rest.

We would not call thee back to earth
Amid the sorrows here,
But knowing well thy Christian worth
We'll try and follow there.

Amid the pains and cares of life
Thy soul was oft times blest,
In looking with an eye of faith
To where the Christian rests.

O'er sixty years a soldier was
In battle for thy Lord,
Defending well thy master's cause
In keeping of his word.

We miss thee here, dear father, now,
The one to us so dear,
But to God's will we meekly bow
Until our Lord appear.

Farewell, farewell, thou blest of God,
Again we say farewell,
Until we meet in the blest abode
Where God and our loved ones dwell.

—MRS D. CORYELL.

Lines on the Death of Eila, Wife of S. V. Dibble.

Gone like a summer flower,
Drooped like a lily from your view,
We trust she's gained a sunnier bower,
Where she will wait for you.

Husband and babes a sad farewell,
Mother and brothers dear,
I could no longer with you dwell,
For Jesus called me here.

Two little ones are left with you,
Their mother lies at rest.
On earth you no more can her view,
But Jesus knoweth best.

We trust her home is now above,
Her friends may meet her there,
Her babes must miss their mother's love,
But need not miss her care.

She has bid her loved ones all good-bye,
To meet no more on earth,
We likewise in the grave must lie
And claim another birth.

Many loved ones have gone before,
The ties on earth are riven,
They have landed on a brighter shore
And found a home in heaven.

Great God, we bow low in the dust,
And all our sorrows tell;
Thou knowest what is best for us,
And doeth all things well.

The Speed of Modern Steamships.

In an illustrated article contributed by S. G. W. Benjamin to the September Century, the author (who has already written entertainingly on sailing and steam yachts in the June and July Century) discusses the ocean steamships and says in part:

Thirty years ago sixteen days was a fair allowance for the passage between England and New York by steam. By gradual steps the point was reached when eleven days was the minimum, and this startled the world. Then began a rivalry between the Inman and White Star lines, attended by a succession of runs showing a gradual increase of speed, which proved a great advertisement for these lines. In 1871 the average time of twenty-four crack voyages by these lines was eight days, fifteen hours and three minutes. The Adriatic's best westward time was forty-three minutes less. It should be remembered that the westward passage is generally longer than in the other direction, owing to westerly winds and the Gulf Stream. In emulation of this speed in 1877 the City of Berlin, of the Inman line, made the trip to Queenstown from New York in seven days, fourteen hours and twelve minutes, and in the same year the Britannic, of the White Star line, crossed from Queenstown in seven days, ten hours and fifty-three minutes. In 1879 a new rival appeared in this field, the Arizona, of the Guion line. This steamship made the eastward passage in 1880 in seven days, ten hours and forty-seven minutes, and in one trip in 1881 she lessened this time about three hours. This seemed to be about the best that could be expected of these superb ships, when the new Guion steamer, Alaska, after a number of astonishing runs, accomplished the westward passage between the two ports, on April 18, 1882, in seven days, six hours and twenty minutes, actual time, against heavy seas. In a subsequent trip eastward she ran the distance in six days and twenty-two hours, actual time. In this, the quickest passage ever made across the Atlantic, the Alaska traveled 2,895 knots, being about an average of 418½ knots per day, for seven successive days. It will be observed that the increase of speed has been graduated in proportion to the gradual increase of size. The ships of 1850 were rarely much over 2,500 tons, and were barely 300 feet long. Now the average length of ocean steamers is upward of 400 feet, while 500 feet is not uncommon. The City of Rome is 586 feet long, and registers 8,826 tons; the Servia is 530 feet, and 8,500 tons; the Alaska is 520 feet, and 6,932 tons. The Austral, intended for the Australian trade, is 474 feet long and forty-eight feet three inches broad, and registers 9,500 tons. The measurement of this vessel, and of the new Cunarder Cephalonia, which is 440 feet long by forty-six feet beam, indicate that the reaction against extreme length has already commenced in the great ship-yards of Great Britain, being in each of these cases less than ten beams to the length.

A Gentle Horse.

Eli Perkins writes: My wife, having been run away with once, is always afraid the horse is going to run away with her again. Yesterday when Harrington, who runs the Maplewood Hall stables, brought up a span, he had to stand the usual questioning:

"Now, are they very gentle?"

"O, certainly—kind as kittens."

"Did they ever run away?"

"Never."

"Do you think they could run away?"

Harrington looked at the horses sadly and said: "Madame to be frank with you, I don't think they could."

"Well, have they ever been frightened?"

"No, never. Nothin' could frighten 'em," said Harrington.

"Has anything ever happened to them that would have frightened them if they had been skittish?" continued my wife, earnestly.

"Well, yes, ma'am; su'thin' did happen thutter day that would have skeered 'em et they'd been skittish."

"What, Harrington—what?"

"Why, I was drivin' along down' the Woolsey hill; a storm came up, an' six streaks of lightnin' struck them horses right on the head, and—"

"Did they run?"

"No, ma'am; they didn't move; they jest stood still and pawed the ground for more lightnin'. They liked it."

"An', the next day," continued Harrington, "A city feller was drivin' this team, an' he let a railroad train go right through 'em."

"Did it kill them?"

"No, but the city feller was all used up. But you ought'er a seen them horses. They acted so human like.—Why, when they picked them out of the trees, they walked straight up to the city feller, took him by the seat of his pantaloons—"

"Oh, my!"

"Lifted him right back into the wagon again, and—"

"My gracious me!"

"And then they hitched themselves back onto the wagon and drove themselves home. Didn't they Mr. Kettelle?"—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Complaints in regard to shallow and insufficient teaching are made in England as well as in America. The essential elementary branches are badly taught there as they are here. Handwriting, English and arithmetic, it is said, seem to be considered of no possible use to the pupil, but give them a smattering of Latin and Greek, and perhaps a little French and German, and they leave school as excellent scholars. A teacher writes to an English journal: "I have a pupil under me who has only recently left the town grammar school, at the age of 16, after several years as a day scholar, at from thirty to forty guineas a year, and I gather from him that writing was not a subject for teaching; English and grammar was occasionally referred to; and arithmetic was a home lesson. If the answers were right, all well and good, it did not matter how obtained; little or no working was required to be shown."

At last a legitimate use has been found for oleomargarine. Young men who wear the fashionable tight trousers buy it by the keg.

A Street Scene.

"My God, the child!"

Wild and shrill this cry pierced the air, last evening, at the corner of Vine and Fourth streets. It was a woman's voice; the hoarse shouts of a carriage driver fell even; the horses plunged and tugged, a rush took place, and the little morsel of humanity was snatched from beneath the grinding hoofs by a woman's arms and brought in safety to the sidewalk. The frightened child was soothed and petted by her rescuer, who never gave a thought to those who were indebted to her for a life saved.

"Give me the child."

Again it was a woman's voice, low and sweet but stern, and the mother snatched, rather than took, the little toddler from those arms which had proved so true and strong in the hour of need. The expression on the mother's face showed a conflict, a struggle between contempt and gratitude, a desire to thank her benefactor and snatch the baby from possible contagion. It was the look of the matron upon the outcast. It was the gaze of conscious virtue upon open vice.

The look was sufficient; a tear stole down the painted cheek; the mute look of an animal pleading for mercy came in the eyes of the erring sister, but met no reply, and the little girl was handed over to the mother, whose straight-laced virtue prevented her from thanking her preserver, as her tightly laced corsets had prevented her from attempting to save it.

"If you call on Mr. ——, in the morning, he will reward you for your services," was the cold return the woman received. A look of intense agony overspread the features; the now empty hands were pressed tightly against a heart which was bitterly wounded, and the lady swept on, regardless of the few words which fell from the trembling lips, but which would have given food for reflection had they been heard.

"It's George's child."

She had saved the life of the child of the man to whom she owed her fall, and his wife deemed contact with his victim scarcely preferable to death.

The whole episode was of but short duration; it was simply a short society drama which came near being a tragedy. Dramatis personæ—a lost woman, a saved child, a virtuous matron, and an absent man, who has to answer before his God for a soul murdered, and a life wasted, for, as Shelley says:

"No mercy now can clear her brow
For this world's peace to pray,
For the sin forgiven by Christ in Heaven,
By man is cursed away."

The poor woman arranged her dress, which had been torn in her heroic action, wiped the blood from her hand and arm, for not altogether scatheless had she passed through the ordeal; and went her way. It was nothing but a street scene, yet it conveyed the lesson that all that is bad is not worthless, and that the good at times might be a little better.—The Drummer.

Tanner, the Faster, Outdone.

The details of a most marvelous case of protracted abstinence from food has just become fully known, though it has been going on in Forsyth, Ga., for about two months. Peter Cooley, a mulatto, hailing from Anderson, S. C., was arrested about June 1 in Monroe county on a charge of burglary and committed to jail to await his trial at the August term of court. He expressed his determination never to go to the chain gang, stating that he preferred to starve. He steadily refused food for weeks, as can be testified to by Sheriff C. A. King and Deputy Sheriff J. H. King, who has charge of the jail and sees to the feeding of the prisoners. He always refused to eat, and while it was then left in his cell the food was always found afterwards untouched.

He often begged Sheriff King to let him have a razor, under pretense of wanting to shave, and also asked the loan of his knife, but as Mr. King suspected his intention he was never allowed any kind of instrument. But he still adhered to his purpose of self-destruction, and after a month's total abstinence from food Mr. King called Dr. L. B. Alexander in to see the prisoner to ascertain his condition. He was found considerably reduced, but free from all symptoms of insanity, being, in fact, quite rational and intelligent. He reads and writes well, and is much above the average of his race. Mr. King and Dr. Alexander finally prevailed on him to sip a little milk punch, which he did under compulsion. But he has continued to resolutely refuse all food, and can be induced to taste only milk punch or wine occasionally.

Like Dr. Tanner, he drinks water freely, but outside of that he hasn't taken enough nourishment in over two months to keep an ordinary man alive three days. He has lost about sixty pounds of flesh, and is merely a skeleton. He cannot walk a step, and can only get up with assistance. When lying quiet he has the appearance of a dead man.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

Even Montana must have its sensation. An old Chinaman found dead at Park City is said to have been rich once in China, and to have been engaged in a conspiracy which resulted in his death sentence and the confiscation of his property. He escaped from prison, emigrated to America, and was a marked man even here, suffering many persecutions from the Six Companies.

An Exciting Ride.

John Gilpin's famous ride upon his nimble steed, "a bottle swinging at each side," was paralleled once by an exciting donkey-ride at Task, in the Gulf of Oman. The English telegraph operator at that station had been out shooting ibex. He says:

Coming home on a tired donkey, encumbered by two rifles and accompanied by my small brown dog Toby, suddenly we came on a herd of half-wild cows, who mistook Toby for a jackal.

In an instant they all charged furiously down upon me, heads down and tails high in air. Poor Toby came to me for help, and got between the donkey's legs.

I shouted, brandished the rifles and kicked the poor donkey into a sort of three-legged canter. It was the most exciting donkey-ride I ever had in my life. Tony scampered here, there and everywhere, but always as close to the donkey's legs as he could get.

Rush would come one old bull from the right and just graze the donkey's tail, then another would just miss his nose. I thought the climax was reached when head over heels went the donkey, and we all rolled on the ground together.

To my surprise this frightened the cows, and I had time to pick Toby up in my arms, after which the cows took no further interest in him.

The Seven Riddles of the World.

Prof. Du Bois-Reymond is one of the most prominent members of the Berlin Academy of Sciences. When he delivers his popular lectures there is not a lecture-room in Berlin large enough to accommodate his hearers. He is far from being a theist; still less is he a Christian. In an address delivered by him on "The Limits of Natural Science," he propounded what he called "The Seven Riddles of the World"—riddles which have never been explained, and the majority of which never can be by mechanical laws.

The first riddle is the nature and essence of matter and force.

The second is the origin of motion.

The origin of life is the third.

The fourth is the apparent design of nature.

The fifth is the origin of consciousness.

The sixth is the origin of national thought and language.

The last is the freedom of the will. Of this Du Bois-Reymond says: "Our seventh difficulty is none if one resolves to deny the freedom of the will and to declare the subjective conviction of freedom as an illusion; otherwise it is inexplicable."

Going to His Grave.

There he goes again direct to a saloon and pours down another heavy draught of strong drink, not so much because his appetite demands it, but for the artificial buoyancy it produces the after effect of which leaves him more miserable than before; it is this dreadful practice that is daily sending thousands to their graves. A remedy for all this is found in the true friend of temperance,—the best and purest of all medicines, Electric Bitters. Sold at C. A. Wright & Co's. drug store.

A Wild Woman in Missouri.

A nude colored woman, wild as a gorilla, is startling the people of the Marvell section, twenty miles out on the Midland railroad. She has been seen several times, and the last time threw a young lady who was horseback-riding into hysteria, and with a grunt, not unlike that of a wild hog, jumped up and ran into the forest. At the time of her discovery she was burrowing into the side of the road catching and eating crawfish, which she ate, claws, hide and all. As yet nothing can be ascertained as to her identity, but steps will be taken to that end. She is very black, and foams at the mouth when angry like a wild animal at bay.—Globe Democrat.

The Sexton Writes Us.

Fountaintown, Shelby Co., Ind.

Mr. A. Kiefer—Sir: For some years past I have been afflicted with Liver Complaint. I have had several physicians treating my case, but they all failed to reach the seat of disease. During the past year I got much worse, and became so weak and feeble as to be unable to do any work. I had a great deal of headache, and at times became so dizzy that I had to lay down. About six weeks ago I commenced using your Taraxine, and after taking the third dose I felt that dizziness and headache were leaving me. I continued the use of it till I had taken three bottles, and I am now a well man, and am able to do a day's work on the farm. Yours truly, etc.,

WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

DR. A. TRASK'S MAGNETIC OINTMENT.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it meets stamps it at once as the greatest medicine of the age for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the power of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORES, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, CHILBLAINS, AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, EARACHE, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all disorders attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; in this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country, we simply ask those readers of this notice who have ever used this Ointment, to frankly state their confidence without inquiring friends. If but one hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

Price 25 and 40 cents per bottle. Sold by all dealers in medicine.

SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIGG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION of an EYE—Its Subsequent Removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craigg was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster county, N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craigg that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craigg demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go back to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye, and treated Mr. Craigg with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's great success as a Surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

COMMONWEALTH, Wis., July 20, '82.
DR. PENGELLY:—Please send me one more of your Zoa-Phora. The one bottle I have used has done wonders. I have been under doctors' care more or less for five years. Have suffered from Inflammation, Ulceration and Prolapsus Uteri, weakness and heavy head, in fact felt worn out, not able to sit up. I am feeling just splendid now, and shall cobuinue Zoa-Phora until cured. MRS. N. W. HAMAR.

From Mrs. John Spitler, No. 28 Wilt St., Fort Wayne, Ind.:
I have been suffering for over 16 years with spasmodic pain in my head, and general nervous debility. I had a severe attack of pain in my head two weeks ago, caused by weakness and nervous exhaustion. I really thought I should die. We had Zoa-Phora in the house, and my husband said we would test it to the uttermost. He gave it to me, according to directions, for several cases, and in less than two hours, to his great satisfaction, I had what he called immediate relief, and felt like going to sleep. I advise all ladies who suffer with nervous or sick headache, or any form of female weakness, to use your Zoa-Phora, for there is no medicine to compare with it.
May 15th, 1882.

JERSEYVILLE, Ill., April 25, '82.
DR. PENGELLY—Dear Sir:—I am more than pleased with the effects of your Zoa-Phora in our daughter's case. I am surprised to see how she has improved. She is gaining in weight and color; her nerves are steady, and the distress she suffered in her chest is entirely all gone. I firmly believe that Zoa-Phora is all that saved her. I am willing you should use my letter, for I am not afraid to tell what a wonderful cure your medicine is, and I would like all who suffer to try it.
Yours Respectfully, MRS. SARAH RANDOLPH.
I shall always remember gratefully the good health your medicine has brought my daughter. LEWIS RANDOLPH.

A Wrong Theory.

Samuel Shin has learned a lesson which will remain fresh in his mind if he lives to be ten thousand years old. As he entered the lodge to arrange the chairs and benches for the opening of the regular Saturday night meeting, he discovered a big watermelon on the stove. Samuel is not always a respecter of the rights of property. His everyday theory is: "To the finder belongs the watermelon." Having no doubt that this fruit had been left behind by some member at the last meeting, and hoping that he had time to devour the whole of it before any one should come in, he proceeded to business. Scarcely had he laid hands on the melon before there was an explosion which upset everything in the room and landed Samuel under the lavender bench forty feet away. He received three cuts on the nose, two on the chin, had his wool badly frizzled, and it will be seven weeks before he will be able to wink with his left eye.

"Gem'len, I trust dat dis lesson will sink deep into yer hearts an' be tooken fur a solemn warnin'," said Brother Gardner, as he opened the meeting. "In de fust place de pusson who lets his curiosity lead him aroun' by de nose will trabble in the swamps as often as on de highway. In de nex' place, he who has no respects fur de rights of odders will often fin' possesshun a dangerous thing. Had Brudder Shin stood off a distance of ten feet an' bin content to gaze on dat mellyon an' let his mouf water ober de ideah of what was inside, he would not at dis minit be lyin' on a bench in de antyroom with his head on a paint-keg an' his heart grievin' fur de long ago. Envy am de fodder on which a small-minded man exists. Jealousy am de weapon of a man who hasn't brains 'nuff to pull himself up. Avarice am a feelin' borrowed from de hog. We will now go ahead an' warm up de machinery of routine bizness."—Detroit Free Press.

How Tarantulas Fight.

There was recently received in Denver, for store exhibition, two full-grown tarantulas, one of the brown and the other of the black variety. The brown fellow was caged in a common cigar box and the black one in a glass jar. As they could not be exhibited to advantage in contrivances of this kind, and as they were not very pleasant company to have running about loose, a box almost two feet square with a glass top was procured, on the bottom of which a layer of sand was spread to make the animals feel at home. The cover was then drawn and the two spider pitched into it from their separate cages. No sooner did the one discover the other's presence than they rushed at each other as viciously as two panthers, and immediately closed in deadly embrace. They came together with a bound, and then twining their long, hairy legs about each other rolled over and over in the sand, biting each other savagely, and then tugging with all their might as if endeavoring to crush each other by sheer muscular power. Incredible as it may seem, this sort of warfare was kept up for six hours, during most of which time it could not be seen that either was gaining the slightest advantage, as neither showed any sign of disposition to end the fight except by the death of his adversary. At last the black one succumbed and rolled over dead on the sand, while the victor immediately proceeded to reap the spoils of his long battle. Seizing his vanquished enemy in his stout horns, or pincers, or whatever contrivance he has for that purpose, he rapidly tore him limb from limb, and coolly proceeded, in true cannibalistic fashion, to make a meal of him. In a very short time nothing was left except a little pile of legs and pieces of shell to mark the spot where one tarantula had fallen and another had dined.—Denver Tribune.

Flowery Writing.

No one wants to read flowery writing nowadays. Common sense rules the pen. A poetic youth wanted to inform the prosaic world that there had been a fall of snow: "The angels rustled their wings at the hour when Aurora goes forth to fulfil her mission, and the earth was covered with a fleecy mantle of white." But the editor quietly dropped it into the waste-basket, and wrote instead: "Snow fell this morning." Here is an example, from a country paper, of the ambitious style of a weather paragraph: "After a long period of unsettled weather, it must have gladdened every one yesterday morning when the sun, with all his glorious brilliancy and splendor, shone forth, with golden ray scattering cloud and mist, and with his cheering beams and glowing smile causing the birds to sing, the trees of the forest to rejoice, and the flowers of the field to unfold themselves in bright array." Why not have simply stated that fine weather had at last set in? It was also a country brother who thus began a paragraph announcing the sudden demise of a local shoemaker: "We are being constantly reminded of the inexorability of death—the certain, and it may be sudden, visit of 'the angel with the amaranthine wreath,' as death is so beautifully designated by Longfellow—and it is our painful duty to-day to chronicle the melancholy fact that one who has played his part, and played it well in life, has passed through nature to eternity." No editor would pay a penny a line for that sort of thing in these enlightened times.

Lewistown, Pa., has a lad nearly twenty years of age who has never spoken to his father. He seems to be possessed of a natural antipathy to so doing, and yet says that should he ever be prompted to address the old man he shall speak freely. A quarrel which the parents had during the mother's pregnancy is said to be responsible for the strange state of affairs, the mother at that time not having spoken to her husband for a full year.

The selectmen of the town of Woolwich, Me., are trying to decide whether they can erase from the pauper record of that town the name of Edward Leeman, who was maintained by the town from 1835 to 1847. In 1848 Leeman left Woolwich and managed to accumulate a fortune of $14,000 before he died last year in Boston. His widow offers to pay a considerable sum of money to have the record of his pauperism blotted out.

Toronto Has a Sea-Serpent.

The morning was cool, and perhaps this was the reason why some of the workmen engaged at the targets on the Garrison ranges say the serpent they saw was not more than fifty feet long and the size of a man's body. The story, as told by one of them, is in substance as follows: Between 8 and 9 o'clock, while placing the targets in position on No. 1 range, a boy rushed up saying that there was a queer thing floating near the shore. Some of the men were curious enough to leave their work and hasten down to the shore. There, sure enough, was a large bluish-gray mass floating lazily near the shore. It had every appearance of being asleep, as its body yielded to every ripple. Part was submerged, but the upper portion of the head floated just above the water. That part which was visible was covered with short, stiff bristles in front, which increased in length toward the sides, and extended for a distance of about ten feet on each side. The back, or at least that portion of it which appeared above the water, was lighter colored than the head. A good view was had of the monster for upward of three minutes, when, suddenly raising its head out of the water, it gave a swish with its tail and started directly south, in the direction of one of the steamers. Its head, as it raised it above the water, was very much like that of an eel, with the exception of the long, trailing hair or whiskers. Its eyes were small, and as it dashed off one of the men said he thought he heard it give a short, sharp bark. A line of foam marked its progress out into the lake for about half a mile, when, turning sharp around, it dashed toward the Exhibition wharf, and again out into the lake, where they soon lost sight of it. The men did not appear at all anxious to speak of the matter, as they feared their veracity would be questioned. As it is, their story is given for what it is worth, but surely the word of three men who saw it is worth that of thirty who did not see it.—Toronto Mail.

Crushing a Citizen.

The proprietor of a Woodward avenue store, says the Free Press, which had been finely decorated in honor of the Knights of Pythias was at his door yesterday, when an old man lounged up and began:

"Such ignorance I never saw in all my life! You see that man across there—the one with the white hat on?"

"Yes."

"Well, he was having a good deal to say, and I asked him who Pythias was. Would you believe it he couldn't answer me?"

"C-couldn't he?" stammered the citizen.

"No, sir, he couldn't. Think of such ignorance in this enlightened age! When I told him who Pythias was he called me a liar. Now, I want to prove that I'm right. You come over and tell him all about it."

"But I—I can't leave."

"Then I'll bring him over here."

"No, you needn't—I'm busy."

"I see you are, but when a man calls me a liar I want to prove that I ain't. I'll have him over in a minute."

He hadn't crossed the street before the merchant slid into the store and hurried up stairs to keep out of sight for an hour, and it was only after he was certain that the old man had departed that he slipped down and consulted Webster's dictionary to see if he could find out whether Pythias was a town, a man, or a temple on a hill.

Brave Boys at Niagara.

Last week a party of Germans stopping at the Frontier House, Suspension Bridge, among whom was Morits Witmer, a wealthy brewer from Sexton, Germany, visited the "Maid of the Mist" landing for the purpose of taking a bath. At this point, it will be remembered, the current is very rapid, and to one not accustomed to the place it is perilous to venture in. Mr. Witmer, knowing nothing of the water's depth, or the swiftness of the current, got out too far, and would have been carried down the rapids but for the timely assistance rendered by two lads named Henry and William Rodgers, sons of Mr. Henry Rodgers, of the Canadian Customs House at Clifton, who arrived upon the scene as the man was sinking for the third time; the boys seeing the man in danger at once jumped into the water, and after a hard struggle succeeded in rescuing him. William was the first to reach the drowning man, who grasped him by the neck with a death-grip and drew him under. Henry had by this time reached the scene, and, diving, managed to release the drowning man's hold of his brother, after which the boys succeeded in getting him ashore, the whole party being thoroughly exhausted. Witnesses of the affair say it was one of the most gallant rescues ever performed on the Niagara River.—Niagara Falls Gazette.

A Loss Prevented.

Many lose their beauty from the hair falling or fading. Parker's Hair Balsam supplies necessary nourishment, prevents falling and grayness, and is an elegant dressing.

A Big Success.

"My wife was in bed two years with a complication of disorders her physician could not cure, when I was led to try Parker's ginger tonic. It was a big success. Three bottles cured her, at a cost of one dollar and fifty cents, and she is now as strong as any woman.—R. D., Buffalo.

MALARIA!

THE ONLY REMEDY KNOWN TO DESTROY THIS DEADLY PEST.

The most alarming fact, in our sanitary conditions, is the prevalence of MALARIA POISON not only in marshy, low-lying districts, but in the cities and upon elevated grounds, where a few years since it was unheard of. Frequently fatal disorders of the digestive functions, wasted and enfeebled body and even insanity are the dire effects of malarial poisoning, the sure precursors of if the poison is not neutralized. The boatmen on the Delaware and Hudson Canal, as well as the inhabitants of the adjoining country, have been great sufferers from MALARIA. Not until a few years past did they find a reliable remedy. Now thousands testify that there is but one real and speedy cure for malarial poisoning and that is DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY," which by its action upon the blood purifies it and restores a healthy tone to the entire system. As a preventive in localities where this danger lurks, it is invaluable. The "FAVORITE REMEDY" also cures the worst liver and kidney complaints and all diseases caused by vitiated blood. For sale by all druggists, price $1.00. It is an absolutely safe, purely vegetable remedy; the greatest alterative medicine in the world. Address the proprietor, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

The entire population of Zagazi is again at work in the fields, the telegraphic censorship has been abolished, and trains have been restored between Cairo and Kafar-el-Dwar. The wife of Engineer Melville has been placed in the asylum at Norristown, Pennsylvania, on a certificate of insanity given by two physicians. Melville telegraphed to his sister in New York to take care of his home and children. She is a daughter of Judge Waldron, of Buffalo.

A most determined attempt at suicide, which may result in success, was made Wednesday by Henry Weiner, a grocer at Carondelet, Missouri. He stabbed himself thirty times just below the heart, severing the main artery in each arm, made twelve slashes behind the right ear, cut a gash of an inch on the crown of his head, and wounded himself in the right wrist. When the physicians had sufficiently revived him, he drank the contents of a coal oil lamp.

The ruffianly conduct of the residents of the Arab quarter of Cairo brought out an order for a demonstration by the British household cavalry. Three princes who last May signed a petition for the deposition of the khedive called at the palace in Alexandria, and were ordered to leave at once. All rebel officers at Ramleh below the rank of colonel have been released. The English have abandoned the works erected at Port Said. Damitta has surrendered, and General Wood will see that it is completely evacuated. Property in Alexandria valued at £1,000,000 will be confiscated to indemnify sufferers by the massacre.

The corpse of an unknown lad is having a variety of adventures in the Pennsylvania towns. The boy was killed by a train at Johnstown, last month, and was identified by a citizen of Bristol as that of his son, and tenderly laid to rest, an event soon followed by the return of the wanderer from Bristol. Reading of the occurrence, an anxious father in Sharon, named Seaburn, had the remains disinterred, became thoroughly satisfied that they were those of his remaining son, and buried them at Sharon August 20. The reappearance of Eddie Seaburn, Wednesday, caused the wildest excitement among those familiar with the circumstances of the double mistake. The real name of the wandering corpse has not yet been ascertained.

It would appear that a gendarmerie for Egypt is already being organized in Europe, as a party of enrolled men have started from Geneva. Their pay is from 150 to 300 francs per month, and French and Italians are ineligible. General Wolseley and Admiral Seymour will be raised to the peerage for their distinguished service. The khedive has offered the British consul general the grand cross of the order of Osmanli. A solemn thanksgiving service was held Sunday in the Catholic church at Alexandria. British troops dismounted the guns at Ghemileh, and the people have assumed their ordinary vocations. The khedive has requested that his route of entry into Cairo be past the houses of Arabi Pasha and Toulba Pasha. It is generally believed in Egypt that no rebels will be executed, but that they will be banished and their property confiscated.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The books of the treasury department show that, under the administration of Secretary Folger, during the period of ten months (from Nov. 1, 1881, to the 1st of the present month) the following reductions have been effected: Of the interest-bearing debt, $100,000,000; of total debt less cash in the treasury, $146,000,000; of annual interest charge, $4,515,756.

The first comptroller of the treasury, to whom the subject has been referred, will it is understood, decide that the laws do not warrant the practice, which prevails to some extent, of substitute clerk. There have been some abuses in that department arising out of the system of filling our clerkships by the persons who are nominally designated as clerks, the principals often securing several months' leave of absence, during which they employ substitutes at much smaller salaries.

The secretary of the interior has a communication from the general counsel for the Northern Pacific Railroad company informing him that the company on the 18th inst., paid the treasurer of the United States $20,182 the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying 46,906 acres of land in Minnesota for which patents were issued the company in 1873. This payment is in accordance with a decision of the interior department June 5, 1882, but is made under protest and without waiving any of the company's rights.

The department of state has been notified by Consul Sterne, of Buda-Pesth, that, contrary to general expectation, the price of wheat, instead of being well sustained at $1.20 per bushel, has, within the two weeks ending Aug. 25, 1882, fallen to $1.15, and even at this decline the export, which had opened under flying colors, is dragging, and there is every probability of a still further reduction. This change is principally caused by the reports from the United States of abundant crops and immense shipments of grain. Another reason is the difficulty attendant on the transportation of grain from the interior, and the general inability of the railways to supply adequate rolling-stock.

It is now said that Gen. Grant and Mr. Trescott, the commissioners appointed to negotiate a commercial treaty with Mexico, will leave for that country about Nov. 1, after danger from yellow fever is over. Persons interested in American enterprises there are of opinion that this commission will obtain such concessions from the government of Mexico as will open the mining regions of that country to American capital. The decree of the Mexican government abolishing the export duty on silver will go into effect Nov. 1.

The department of state has received a dispatch dated Aug. 28, from Minister Cramer, of Berne, in regard to the almost total failure of the potato crop in Switzerland. Potatoes forming one of the principal articles of diet of the Swiss, Mr. Cramer assumes that a large import must necessarily take place, and he suggests that American exporters of breadstuffs should at once make arrangements to supply the deficit caused by the failure referred to in his dispatch. Hungary is spoken of in Switzerland as the country from which the chief supply is to be drawn, but Mr. Cramer sees no reason why American potatoes can not be placed upon the Swiss markets on more reasonable terms than the Hungarian. The shortest route of export from the United States to Switzerladd is via Cherbourg or Havre.

A proposition that the government buy all the telegraph lines outside of the Gould system is being agitated here and at New York. It is received with considerable favor here by government officials of rank, and informal offers to sell have been made by some of the smaller companies. The project meditates the absorption of the Mutual Union, Baltimore and Ohio, Lehigh, American Rapid, Bankers and Merchants', Postal, Chicago and Milwaukee and Board of Trade Companies, the new Baltimore and Ohio Cable Company and the Central and South American cable. The government now has about 4,859 miles of telegraph line in operation throughout the territories, over which commercial and a general business is transacted for the benefit of the public.

CONVICTION OF STAR ROUTERS.

The star route cases at Philadelphia resulted in a verdict of guilty against McDowell and Price, while Ensign was acquitted. Ensign's acquittal was in accordance with the instructions of the court, who announced early in the trial that there was not sufficient evidence connecting him with the conspiracy to show that he was a party to it. The verdict was quite clearly foreshadowed by the nature of the evidence, and its announcement caused but little surprise in the court-room.

IMMIGRATION FOR AUGUST.

During the month of August there arrived in the customs districts of Baltimore, Boston, Detroit, Huron, Minnesota, New Orleans, New York, Passamaquoddy, Philadelphia, and San Francisco, 52,363 passengers—of whom 43,076 were immigrants, 7,047 citizens of the United States returned from abroad, and 2,470 aliens not intending to remain in the United States. Of this total number of immigrants, there arrived from England and Wales 6,977; Ireland, 3,643; Scotland, 1,212; Austria, 758; Belgium, 90; Bohemia, 295; Denmark, 840; France, 617; Germany, 16,010; Hungary, 321; Italy, 676; Netherlands, 340; Norway, 2,062; Russia, 826; Poland 152; Sweden, 2,601; Switzerland, 837, Dominion of Canada, 4,441; and from all other countries, 437.

THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

The public printer has delivered the first complete sets of the bound edition of the Congressional Record, including the index. The volumes of the debates make 7,634 pages and the index 734 pages, being by far the largest number of pages reached in a single session. The volumes are delivered this year over two months sooner than was ever done before, it generally being from three to four months after adjournment of congress before they were ready. An order has been given Public Printer Rounds for 2,500,000 register-cards for the use of the postoffice department. To fill this order it will require about 104,167 sheets of card-board, which, after being cut to the proper size, if strung end to end alone, would cover 158 miles, or nearly the distance between Washington and Trenton, N. J.

WAR OF THE RACES.

There is considerable local excitement here in consequence of the admission of the colored children into some of the white schools of the city. Under existing regulations the school funds are divided up in proportion to the number of white and colored children and separate school houses have been built for each. In some parts of the city the houses built for colored schools are more commodious and costly than those provided for the whites. For some two or three years there has been a persistent effort on the part of a few colored persons to get their children into the white schools, but the school board has refused to sanction the proposition. In one or two school districts the school trustees, without consulting the full board, gave instructions to admit colored children. Trouble is apprehended.

FOREMAN DICKSON'S CHARGES.

Inquiry at the Department of Justice fails to elicit any definite information as to when Messrs. Brewster Cameron and Bowen, the two officials who, Mr. William Dickson alleges, attempted to bribe him in connection with the verdict in the star route cases, will return to Washington. Immediately after the disclosure of Mr. Dickson, the announcement was made that those two officials had been ordered home, and that a prompt investigation would follow. It is now said at the department that Mr. Brewster Cameron is in Arizona on government business, and he is not expected here at once, unless he has been instructed to come by Mr. Kerr or Mr. George Bliss, of the special counsel in the star route cases. If this has been done, the Department of Justice has now been advised of the fact. The question is now being asked whether the counsel for the government have changed their announced intention of making a swift investigation into the severe charges made by Foreman Dickson and decided to postpone it until the two officials named return to Washington at their leisure.

INCREASING THE POSTOFFICE BUSINESS.

The correspondence of the postoffice department develops the existence of a singular mania in the south and west—a matrimonial insurance or lottery craze, in which the insurer guarantees any person against matrimony, unless it occurs within three months from date of insurance, given upon the principle, apparently, that "true love never runs smooth," and that the chances are more than even that in less than three months any existing match will be broken off. A large number of postmasters have applied for additional clerks to handle their greatly increased business from the cause. The following from a postmaster in a prominent southern city was received a few days ago: "I beg to say this office is overwhelmed with business, owing largely to the singular development of matrimonial associations, as well as to the wonderful development and growth of the city. The matrimonial craze seems to have attacked all classes and conditions of men. My mailing force, my distributors of mails, and others are worked to complete exhaustion. If therefore, it be necessary longer to delay increased appropriations for this office, please grant me at once temporary assistance, say at least five clerks."

FRANKLIN.

Franklin has a school census of 420.

The work of surveying on the T. & M. R. R. is progressing in this town.

The editor of the Adrian Press seems to have been very creditably informed in regard to the 'pet children' in the Paragon district.

An infant son of John Cook was buried at the Centre last Wednesday. The funeral was held at the M. E. church, Rev. A. W. Wilson officiating.

Rev. John H. Cowley, of Adrian College, has been engaged to preach at the congregational church for the next six months.

Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Delong are visiting their daughter, Ettie, at Cambria Mills, Hillsdale county.

Wm. Deming has decided to remain in Franklin and will occupy a portion of the congregational parsonage.

The following pupils in district No. 1 have neither been absent nor tardy for the month ending Sept. 30: Josephine Crittenden, Alma Whelan, Rena Allen, Clarence Wisner, Grace D. Morseman, Leon Allen, Harvey E. Love.

Reuben Langdon, Bert Crittenden and B. C. Knapp are in Chicago this week.

We understand that John Allshouse met with a severe accident while threshing at Charles Sheffield's, in Adrian township, last Tuesday, by which he lost four teeth and had his jawbone fractured. Dr. Perkins is in attendance.

The school house in Dist. No. 6 is to be considerably repaired.

Mathew Boyd moves next week to a piece of land recently purchased near Kalkaska.

Geo. Rixom has purchased the property adjoining him heretofore owned by Mr. Allison.

Albert Palmer is putting up a wing to his dwelling.

A son of our resident, Mr. Samuel Helm, was instantly killed last Saturday by the cars at Elkhart.

George Wilson, of Milan, died last week having been lingering with consumption for the past six months.

Lewis Helm and wife are spending the week with his parents here.—Since Lew. left here about six months ago he has been at Decatur, Ind.

The evening address on the temperance issue was pronounced one of the best.

In response to the demand of quite a large portion of the congregation the official board has decided to not rent the church seats this year, and if the finances can be raised as easily as heretofore the change will be permanent.

BRITTON.

John Cheever and Norman Ackley are building new barns.

James Underwood moved to this place this week.

Dick Rixom and Nute Ingersol will soon be able to occupy their new dwellings.

Mrs. Britton returned from Clinton county last week where she had been spending the summer.

A public enterprise in the shape of a sidewalk from the depot to the highway is being agitated.

Parker can read his "title clear" now for the next year to come. John Britton having purchased the store of Fletcher and will renew the lease.

Almost a riot is caused by Old Sol's unruly horses every few days and the matter will soon be brought to a focus if they are not taken care of.

The city still continues to spread. The last ground broke is for a cottage built by John Britton and to be occupied by W. J. Clark the station agent.

Waring & Griffin have their mill raised. It is 24x90 ft. and two stories high. They have exchanged their old engine and boiler for something nearly twice the capacity, which will give power enough to run all the machinery they expect to put in at once.

We have heard of the bulls and bears of Wall street, we have seen Dan. Rice's circus and Barnum's menagerie but the combined show we had here last Saturday beat anything the natives ever saw. Old Sol's wild herd of bulls, steers, cows and calves had been purchased by Kelley & Co. and were to be loaded that afternoon.—With a familiar co-bos and some tame cattle ahead, and a faint and cautious ho-a-go-long behind the herd was safely in the cattle yards. The bovines here caught sight of the pump man, telegraph operator, section boss and others who had mounted the lumber piles, freight cars and telegraph poles and the show began. In five seconds every "kritter" was at large, some clearing every fence before them, others stuck fast in the cattle guards, while one old cow stood the ground and drove every man, horse and dog off the depot ground. It was long after dark when the show ended and Vem Osterhout was got out of the car.

SPRINGVILLE.

Mr. B. Beach has been having his engine repaired, and is ready to commence threshing again.

Kirkby Bros. are going to build a new house, which will add greatly to the beauty of their little lot in the village. J. H. Smith has the job, and commenced operations this morning.

A happy party of young people met at the residence of John Monaghan on Wednesday, for the purpose of surprising his daughter, Mary Jane. A pleasant time was enjoyed by all, and they went their way rejoicing.

Henry Mensing has his cider mill in proper trim, and is all ready for making either cider or jelly.

J. Hand talks of starting up his brick yard again for a few weeks.

Bradner, of Clinton, was chosen chairman, and Alex Richard, of Raisin, secretary. Alf. James, of Tecumseh, was appointed chairman of the committee on credentials, and the convention then adjourned until after dinner.

Upon assembling in the afternoon the committee on credentials reported the delegates present, and a ballot was taken for representative. The first informal ballot resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes	28
J. W. Bradner	13
J. B. Clement	9

A formal ballot was then ordered, with the following result:

Whole number of votes	35
Necessary to a choice	18

Mr. Bradner's nomination was then made unanimous, and he accepted the same.

Temperance Meeting.

Hon. Geo. Woodford, of Illinois, will speak in the opera house on temperance, next Sunday, Oct. 8, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. This is the first of a series of meetings to be held in the opera house during the ensuing week. Those who remember Mr. Woodford's lecture last winter given on the regular course will not fail to hear him again, and to those who did not hear him then, we will say, you will find him one of the most interesting speakers you have ever heard. Friends of temperance let us all come out and greet Mr. Woodford with a full house. Those persons who are in the habit of singing are earnestly requested to be present in force. Bring your Gospel Hymns. Take seats upon the platform and make the house ring with song. Admission free.

From overwork and the cares of a large family I have for many years been ailing from rheumatic pains and severe indigestion. Oils and liniments only eased my pain. I took many remedies internally, hoping to find permanent relief. My next door neighbor, Mrs. Perry, bid me try Brown's Iron Bitters, and that it had cured her of dyspepsia, irregularities, etc. I did so, and have not suffered an ache or pain after using the first bottle, nor has indigestion troubled me."

Good Advice.

You will prevent and cure the greater part of the ills that afflict mankind in ths or any section, if you keep your stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that does this as surely as Parker's Ginger Tonic. It will keep your blood rich and pure, and give you good health at little cost. See other column.

Adrian Times of Saturday: Wm. Maudesley, the unfortunate engineer who was injured at the railroad accident near Clinton yesterday, was brought to his home on Center street, in this city, last evening. Dr. Woodward, of Tecumseh, accompanied him here, and the case is now in charge of Dr. A. M. Stephenson. This morning he was quite comfortable, and if inflammation can be kept out of his principal injury, a severe contusion of the base of the brain, he will undoubtedly recover.

How She Saved Her Darling.

"I shall not feel so nervous again about baby's teething," writes a grateful mother. "We almost lost our darling from cholera infantum, but happily heard of Parker's Ginger Tonic in time. A few spoonfuls soon cured baby, and an occasional dose keeps us in good health."—Brooklyn Mother.

Why Welcome.

THE ARKANSAW TRAVELLER.

THE ORIGINAL AMUSING STORY.

The original Arkansaw Traveller was not precisely the same character that Frank Chanfrau presents on the stage. In fact, his name was not "Kit," but "Sandy," and he never had a wife killed and a child stolen from him during his terrestrial existence. The Arkansaw Traveller's name was Colonel Sandy Faulkner, and he was born in Georgetown, Ky., in 1803. A correspondent says he came to Arkansas in 1829, and settled in Chicot County, on the Mississippi River, as a cotton planter. In 1839 Colonel Faulkner, with his father, the late Nicholas Faulkner, a Virginian by birth, took up his residence in Little Rock, where he died August 4, 1874, at the age of seventy-one years.

It was well-known throughout the Northwest that Colonel Faulkner was the original personator of the Arkansaw Traveller—it was his pride to be known as such. The story, it is said, was founded on a little incident which occurred in the campaign of 1840, when he made the tour of the State in company with the Hon. A. H. Sevier, Governor Fulton, Chester Ashley, and Governor Yell. One day in the Boston Mountain the party approached a squatter's for information of the route, and Colonel Sandy was made spokesman of the company, and it was upon his witty responses the tune and story were founded.

On returning to Little Rock, a grand banquet was given in the famous "bar-room" which used to stand near the Anthony House, and Colonel Sandy was called upon to play the tune and tell the story. Afterward it grew into popularity. When he subsequently went to New Orleans, the fame of the Arkansaw Traveller had gone ahead of him, and at a banquet, amid clinking glasses and brilliant toasts, he was handed a violin by the then Governor of Louisiana, and requested to favor them with his favorite Arkansas tune. At the old St. Charles Hotel a special room was devoted to his use, bearing in gilt letters over the door, "Arkansaw Traveller."

The following is the best-authenticated account of the dialogue between Faulkner, the "Traveller," and the squatter:

Traveller. Halloo, stranger.

Squatter. Hello yourself.

T. Can I get to stay all night with you?

S. No, sir; you can't git to—

T. Have you any spirits here?

S. Lots uv 'em; Sal seen one last night by that ar ole holler gum, and it nearly skeered her to death.

T. You mistake my meaning; have you any liquor?

S. Had some yesterday, but Ole Bose he got in and lapped all uv it out'n the pot.

T. You don't understand; I don't mean pot liquor. I'm wet and cold, and want some whisky. Have you got any?

S. O, yes—I drunk the last this mornin'.

T. I'm hungry; haven't had a thing since morning; can't you give me something to eat?

S. Hain't a durned thing in the house. Not a mouful uv meat, nor a dust uv meal here.

T. Well, can't you give my horse something?

S. Got nothin' to feed him on.

T. How far is it to the next house?

S. Stranger, I don't know; I've never been thar.

T. Well, do you know who lives here?

S. Yes, sir.

T. As I am so bold, then, what might your name be?

S. It might be Dick, and might be Tom; but it lacks right smart uv it.

T. Sir! will you tell me where this road goes to?

S. It's never gone anywhar since I've lived here. It's always thar when I get up in the mornin'.

T. Well, how far is it to where it forks?

S. It don't fork at all; but it splits up like the devil.

T. As I'm not likely to get to any other house to-night, can't you let me sleep in yours? And I'll tie my horse to a tree and do without any thing to eat or drink.

S. My house leaks. Thar's only one dry spot in it, and me and Sal sleeps on it. And that thar tree is the old woman's persimmon; you can't tie to it, leaze she don't want 'em shuk off. She 'lows to make beer out'n em.

T. Why don't you finish covering your house and stop the leaks?

S. It's been rainin' all day.

T. Well, why don't you do it in dry weather?

S. It don't leak, then.

T. As there seems to be nothing alive about your place but children, how do you do here, anyhow?

S. Putty well, I thank you. How do you do yourself?

T. I mean, what do you do for a living here?

S. Keep tavern, and sell whisky.

T. Well, I told you that I wanted some whisky.

S. Stranger, I bought a bar'l mor'n a week ago. You see, me and Sal went shares. Arter we got it here we only had a bit betweenst us, and Sal she didn't want to use hern fust, nor me mine. You see, I had a spiggin in one end, and she in t'other. So she takes a drink out'n my end, and pays me the bit for it; then I'd take one out'n hern, and give her the bit. Well, we's getting long fust-rate till Dick, durned skulking skunk, he bor'n a hole on the bottom to suck at, and the next time I went to buy a drink there wan't none thar.

T. I'm sorry your whisky's all gone, but, my friend, why don't you play the balance of that tune?

S. It's got no balance to it.

T. I mean you don't play the whole of it.

S. Stranger, can you play the fiddul?

T. Yes; a little, sometimes.

S. You don't look like a fiddlur, but ef you think you can play any more onto that thar tune, you kin just try it.

(The traveller takes the fiddle and plays the whole of it.)

S. Stranger, tuck half-a-dozen cheers and sot down. Sal, stir yourself round like a six-horse team in a mud-hole. Go round in the holler where I killed that buck this mornin', cut off some of the best pieces, and fetch it and cook it for me and this gentleman d'rectly. Raise up the board under the head of the bed, and get the old black jug I hid from Dick, and gin us some whisky. I know there's some left yit. Til, drive ole Bose out'n the bread-tray; then climb up in the loft and git the rag that's got the sugar tied in it. Dick, carry the gentleman's hoss round under the shed, and give him some fodder and corn, much as he kin eat.

Til. Dad, they ain't knifes enuff for to sot the table.

S. What's big butch, little butch, old case, cob-handle, granny's knife, and the one I handled yesterday? That's enuff to sot any gentleman's table, out'n you lost um. Durn me, stranger, ef you can't stay as long as you please, and I'll give you plenty to eat and drink. Will you have coffey for supper?

T. Yes, sir.

S. I'll be hanged if you do, tho'. We don't have nothin' that way here but grub Hyson, and I reckon it's mighty good with sweetenin'. Play away, stranger; you kin keep on the dry spot to-night.

T. (After about two hours' fiddling.) My friend, can't you tell me about the road I'm to travel to-morrow?

S. To-morrow! Stranger, you won't get out'n these diggins for six weeks. But when it gits so you kin start, you see that big slod over thar? Well, you have to git crost that; then you take the road up the bank, and in about a mile you'll come to a two-acre-and-a-half corn patch. The corn's mitily in the weeds, but you needn't mind that; just ride on. About a mile and a half or two miles from there you'll come to the d—dest swamp you ever struck in all your travels; it's boggy enuff to mire a saddle-blanket. Thar's a fust-rate road about six feet under thar.

T. How am I to get at it?

S. You can't get at it nary a time till the weather stiffens down sum. Well, about a mile by cant you come to a place whar thar's no roads. You kin take the right hand ef you want to; you'll foller it a mile or so, and you'll find it's run out; you'll then have to come back and try the left; when you git about two miles on that you'll know you are wrong, fur they ain't any road thar. You'll then think you're mity lucky to find the way back to my house, whar you kin come and play on that ar tune as long as you please.

Astonished Barber.

Quietly entering a barber shop, the stranger removed his hat and coat and taking a card from his pocket wrote on it:

"I want to be shaved."

A barber stepping forward, read the card, and pointing to a chair, said to his brother artist:

"Deaf as a brass-kettle and dumb as an oyster."

The man straightened himself out in the chair, when his manipulator began lathering his face.

"This deaf cuss has a cheek like a stone-wall," he said, when a general laugh followed.

"Sound his brain, Bob," put in another.

"Yes, stick a pin in him and see if he is entirely dumb," said another.

The victim remaining undisturbed the following shots were fired at him by the delighted tonsorial artists.

"He needs a shampoo, his head is dirter than a cesspool."

"Tell him his red hair needs clipping, before it sets his topknot on fire."

"Shave him with a stool-leg, don't spoil your razor on that stubble."

"Pull off his boots and air his soiled hose."

"Gracious! what a breath. It smells like a Dutch band of music."

"He ought to rent that nose for a locomotive headlight," etc., etc., etc.

While all these complimentary allusions were flying about him, the operation of shaving was finished, and the man arose, put on his coat, and turning to the astonished barber, said:

"How much for the shave and compliments?"

"I—I—I—I," gasped the astonished man. "Oh, nothing—nothing, call again, excuse"—and as the stranger left the shop, the discomfited barbers swore they would never believe in a deaf and dumb man again, until they had first fired a ten pound cannon about his ears.

Huxley says "there was a time when men walked on all fours." He probably alludes to that interesting time in the early life of us all when we approached a neighbor's melon patch from the back way.

Testing An Invention.

"I have a little invention I should like to show you," said an old fellow, ambling into the managing editor's room, carrying a good sized bundle.

"See you later," said the editor; "call again when I'm not so busy."

"But you fellows are always busy," said the old fellow, commencing to unroll his bundle, "and you might as well look at my invention now as any other time."

"Couldn't think of it," said the editor; "you have struck the liveliest part of the day. Step in again about half-past six, or make it later, I cannot attend to you now," and the editor's pen fairly flew over the paper.

"You see, I'm not staying in your town many days," said the old fellow, "and it's now or never, if you wish to inspect——"

"Make it never!" said the editor.

"No," said the old fellow, tugging at a cord about the bundle; "I appreciate the influence of your paper too highly to miss the chance of advertising my invention through its pages, and thus benefiting a much larger public than I could reach in any——"

"Come, let up!" said the editor. "Can't you see that I'm too busy to think about you or your invention this morning?"

"But you will regret it for life if you don't take a look at it," said the old fellow. "And when I become famous you will reproach me for not insisting upon your giving me a lift at the start. You see, my machine is something that must eventually come in use in every household. I know if your wife could see it she would insist upon purchasing one and giving it a good notice in the bargain. I call it the self-acting electric egg-beater. First you screw it to the table like——"

"Here, don't spoil the furniture," said the editor.

"Not in the least," said the old fellow. "You see, there are pads on the face of the clamps, and, by touching the spring we set the machine in motion."

"Don't touch it," shouted the editor, pushing back his chair; but it was too late, and a long, heavy bar attached to the machine began to whirl around, upsetting the ink and scattering the manuscript in all directions.

"Well, that's odd," said the old fellow. "There must be something out of order. You see, this bar beats the eggs, and it should have a different motion. The spring underneath here sets the motive power——"

"Will you take that infernal machine away, or shall I call in the police?" shouted the editor.

"That is very strange," said the old fellow, as the bar whirled around and caught him just below the eye. "I'll just try this spring at the right, and perhaps we shall get a different effect."

"Leave! Git!" shouted the editor.

"That must be attended to," said the old fellow, as the bar hit the desk a tremendous thump, splitting it from end to end. "Now you see the action of the laws of gravitation."

"I'll teach you something about laws," shouted the editor, springing forward and walking the inventor to the head of the stairs "Spanish fashion," and giving him a persuader that landed the old fellow in a confused heap on the bottom stair.

"You—you'll regret this—when I—I become fa—famous," groaned the old man, gathering himself together and looking up at the editor. "I—I have another in—invention—" But, just here the cashier got in his work, and the old fellow was landed out of harm's way, on the sidewalk, just as his patent egg-beater sailed through the window and fell a wreck by his side.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Arabi's Liver.

While we were connected with the militia of the state it would have been disloyal in us to have taken sides with either England or Egypt in the war that is going on, to have given advice to either would have been not only a violation of our armed neutrality, but would have been an injustice to the state that paid us six dollars a year for having resigned the lieutenancy of the Milwaukee Light Horse Squadron, and returned to peaceful pursuits; nations desiring advice from us can receive it at the usual rates, and there will be no impropriety in the transaction. Since becoming a common, ordinary citizen, and taking off the insignia of rank and power, we have not ceased to take an interest in warlike matters. To-day we have been studying over a picture of Arabi Bey, in one of the illustrated papers, and our practical eye, accustomed to grasp a situation from a casual glance at a war map, or a melon field, has made it possible to see at once what is the matter with Arabi, to diagnose his case in a second, and to be able to prescribe a plan of warfare that would bring the rebel into camp as soon as the medicine we should prescribe began to have its effect. Arabi Bey Pasha is bilious. That is all that ails him in the world. His liver is torpid, his stomach is soured, and he is simply out of order. He shows it in his face. His eye balls are yellow—this may be on account of the yellow paper on which the picture is printed, but he is not a well man, this is certain. He does not need iron in his blood, or sugar of lead fired from carbines. What he wants is blue pills, quinine and a liver pad. If the English forces will stop shooting shells, bullets and sabres at this saffron colored rebel, and fire blue pills, quinine, watermelons and liver pads, they can cure him in a week. Guns can be arranged to shower blue pills on his camp, so that some of them must penetrate his system. A mortar made to fit liver pads could be constructed, and all of this could be done without the loss of a man. After Arabi had got the pills and things, he would brighten up, and finally disband his army. It is dyspepsia and liver complaint that is causing the war. If our advice is taken it need not cost much, as we have saved enough out of our salary in the militia to be independent for life.—Peck's Sun.

There is a very large amount of dog-tongue, or vanilla leaf, shipped from North Carolina to northern markets. There is a good demand for it and it brings a fair price. At nearly every station between Wilmington and Goldsboro bales of dog-tongue can be seen at the depots awaiting shipment.

A Sea Captain's Revenge.

It has often been said that there is no despotism in the world equal to that exercised by the captain of a vessel when at sea. This, of course, does not apply to yachts, for those are not registered vessels, but sail under a license, and the captain of such a craft could be discharged by the owner when in mid-ocean if for any reason the owner found fault with his management. But with merchant vessels when once out of port the authority of the captain is, by the laws of every nation, supreme. It is necessary that this should be so. A ship when at sea represents a number of different interests; those who own the vessel, those who own the cargo, those who insure the hull and its contents, and then last, but not least, are the lives of crew and possibly of passengers. There must be a responsible directing head, armed with the legal power to enforce any order he may think necessary for the protection of these different interests, and this authority could be lodged nowhere but with the captain. His judgment may be at fault, but if at the end of a voyage, he can make oath that he considered what he did to be necessary for the protection of the interests intrusted to his keeping, it is almost impossible to punish him for his mistakes. An example of this arbitrary power was given some years ago by the captain of a merchant vessel sailing from one of our Atlantic ports. The ship was bound on a voyage to the west coast of South America, and her owner invited one or two of his friends to go down the bay in her and return on the pilot boat. When outside, the weather became somewhat threatening, and the pilot boat was not immediately on hand. The captain had long cherished a grudge against the owner and saw in the situation an opportunity of revenging himself. In spite of commands and then of appeals made for the owner, his friends and the pilot, he put his vessel upon her course and sailed out to sea. His involuntary passengers were, of course, in a wretched state of mind, coming, as they did, wholly unprepared for a voyage around Cape Horn, and well aware that their relatives and friends would have doubts as to their existence. This led the owner to resort to methods which led the captain to construe to be mutinous, and hence he had the former placed in confinement, while the entire party, with the exception of the pilot, were treated very much as if they had been common sailors, so far as their food supply was concerned. When the ship arrived at her port of destination the captain was instantly dismissed; but that was all the punishment that could be visited upon him.

A New Profession.

"I regard electrical engineering as one especially suited for educated women," says Mr. Greer. "Now, I should think this might be a matter of special interest in Massachusetts, where it is said you have 60,000 more women than men. There are, it is safe to say, 100,000 too many lawyers and doctors and teachers in this country. Every profession is overcrowded, and the result is mediocrity and a constant struggle against the limit of conditions. A new profession is an incalculable public benefit. Electrical engineering can be learned in one-half the time given to the study of law and medicine. Great fortunes have already been made in its pursuit. The enormous extension of the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, and, as will be, the electric railway, creates a great demand for skilled electricians."

"What is the foundation required educationally, to enable one to learn electrical engineering?"

"A good mathematical and scientific education, such as the scientific course of our universities confer."

"Another important demand also for electrical power," continued Mr. Greer, "is the distribution of power to manufactories, shops, and all kinds of mechanical work. There is no doubt that in time such vast extension of works as those of Sheffield, England, will distribute the entire power required from one central electrical appliance. It may even be given to the workmen individually at their cottages, and thus avoid what Ruskin calls the "thundering devils' of machinery and the crowding of men into these great factories."—Boston Traveller.

A Cry for More Oysters.

At the same time that the more thoughtful and observant are uttering protests against the extinction by wholesale dredging, of the oysters of the Chesapeake and its tributaries, there comes a cry from England for more American oysters. The New York Herald quotes from a private business circular which has found its way into the office of that paper. The circular in question is a piteous appeal to be furnished with more oysters, on the ground that the supply in the English market falls below the demand. The trader in question states that nearly twenty-eight million American bivalves were eaten in England between the middle of October and the day of the new year. Between March and May is the season for planting, and when the demand on this account is supplied it is estimated that no less than fifty millions of our oysters will have been either devoured or naturalized in Great Britain. This exhibit only makes it more apparent that the oyster beds of the Chesapeake and its tributaries—the chief source of supply for the most succulent bivalves—must be protected from depletion, if an industry promising such large proportions and valuable returns is to be fostered. There is food in this English circular for the Maryland and Virginia Legislatures.

London has more than a thousand charitable institutions of every grade, and for a vast variety of commendable purposes. The aggregate income of these is over $20,000,000. There are among them eighty-two hospitals and forty-seven dispensaries, whose united yearly receipts are $2,500,000. And yet there is much unrelieved misery in the British metropolis.

At the present rate of consumption it is estimated that the supply of white pine timber in the United States will be exhausted in twelve years.

The Self-Possessed Man.

Among the noticeable persons on the train you will not fail to discover the self-possessed man. He is easily recognized by his rotundity of form, his serene unconsciousness of the frets and worriments which make railroading a misery to the ordinary mortal, and his supreme indifference to the comfort of his fellow-passengers.

The self-possessed man inevitably secures, by a sort of natural selection, the best seat in the car, always on the shady side, and manages, by the aid of his hat, his traveling-bag and his unassuming tact and mastership of the situation, to keep it to the end of his journey.

The self-possessed man, having calmly settled himself in the center of the seat, with his hat upon one side and his traveling appurtenances on the other, slowly produces his newspaper and proceeds to its perusal with dignified deliberation.

Of course the self-possessed man has his window wide open, but equally of course he does not open it himself. The brakeman does that for him, and as the brakeman clambers over the understandings of the self-possessed man to do it, the self-possessed man continues his reading with the utmost complacency and without losing a word.

As the time for starting approaches every other seat is filled, but nobody disturbs the self-possessed man. There is something in his Nova Semblan coolness which deters all attempts to rob him of his monopoly. Nobody has the temerity to ask: "Is this seat engaged?" much less to squeeze himself in without indulging in this conventional remark.

If the cold wind blows into the car of the neuralgic individual in front, or sets the valetudinarian behind to shivering, or if the cinders rush in in sooty showers to the destruction of the eyes and good temper of the passengers in his vicinity, the self-possessed man minds it not. So long as his personal tranquillity was not disturbed, a rain of pitchforks or cats and dogs might dash into that open window, and he be entirely oblivious of both it and its ruinous consequences.

The self-possessed man is also self-possessed when the conductor comes through the car. The other passengers, at the cry of "Tickets, please," cease their reading or conversation and go straightway to fumbling into their pockets with inordinate haste that the ticket puncher may not be delayed, but the self-possessed man budges not until he has been asked again and again for his ticket and then he leisurely lays down his paper, advances on his pocketbook in funereal order and finally produces the pasteboard just as the conductor has lost his last particle of patience.

The sharp, short whistle which strikes terror to every other heart and sends every other heart out of the window, affects neither the heart nor the head of the self-possessed man. His heart beats on with the regularity of an eight-day clock, and his head, bald though it may be, maintains its level, notwithstanding the hungry fly which is boring into his medulla oblongata, or the babel of voices that is dinging into his ears.

None of the major or minor incidents affect the self-possessed man in the least. If the train is ahead of time or behind time, it is all the same to him if anything breaks his serenity remains unbroken; if a man or a cow be run over, he runs over his newspaper as calmly as ever. If the cars should leave the rails and be dashed down an embankment and broken into ten thousand splinters, it is more than probable that the self-possessed man would be found amidst the wreck of matter, still self-possessed, deposited in the most desirable place and position amongst the dead and dying, himself unhurt and undisturbed, and still reading his paper in a leisurely way, unmindful of the horrors of his environment.—Boston Transcript.

The Title of Esquire.

The legislative prohibition by the United States of titles of nobility could not eradicate the trail of human nature which makes such titles, or any verbal badge of distinction, a dearly craved prize to the mass of people; but in our eagerness for these we have done more to abolish them than any laws, by making them ridiculous. A title given to everybody is a self-contradiction and absurdity, for it distinguishes no one and implies nothing; and, in our democratic society, no one is willing to give others the monopoly of such distinctions. In consequence, several titles which were tolerably definite in meaning once have become tags that do not add a hair to the meaning of the name itself. Among these is "Esq." once a coveted badge of professional distinction, and in early New England times confined rigidly to its narrow use—indeed, even "Mr." was only allowed to respectable householders in good standing. Coming to us from feudal England, "Esq." marked members of the legal fraternity and kindred occupations. It was at length assumed by or conferred by courtesy upon prominent and wealthy citizens, and at last has come to mean only an adult male citizen—the same as "Mr.," or, in general, the same as the name would imply without addition. It is therefore utterly useless, a bore and an offence; for a meaningless title is an affront to any man. It should be disused altogether, and left to be marked "obsolete" in the dictionaries. Write "John Smith" or "Mr. John Smith," if you please, but let us have no more of "John Smith, Esq."

A Legislative Doorkeeper.

Some of 'em are very like Cousin John Thrasher's man who told him he wanted to be doorkeeper, but cousin John had promised to vote for another feller, and so, to get rid of him, he says: "Why, Jim, did you ever keep a door?" "No," says he. "Did you ever study a book on keeping a door?" "No," says he, "Did you ever see anybody keep a door?" I never did," says he. "Well, did you ever attend lectures in Augusta, or anywhere, on how to keep a door?" "Of course not," says he. "Well, my dear sir, you had better go back home, and prepare yourself by the next session, and I'll vote for you."—Atlanta Constitution.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, Jealousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. Jealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when Indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Tying her bonnet under her chin
She tied her raven ringlets in.
But not alone in the silken snare
Did she catch her lovely floating hair.
For tying her bonnet under her chin
She tied a young man's heart within.
—Laura Perry.

And many a time that little chin
He's heard from since, you bet and win!
And bonnets she's had for her raven hair,
And many a time he's been called a bear;
And now she is throwing her ringlets back
And says she shall have a sealskin sacque!

"Oh! how my soul longs for freedom," said the oldest Miss Bookworm, of Boston, seated on the rock at the Isle of Shoals. "The yearning spirit within me seems as if it would burst its bonds and seek the future." "Susan," said her father, rising, brushing the sand from his clothes and moving toward the hotel—"Susan, you've eaten too much and are laced too tight," and he then meandered up the beach.

"As for Mrs. So-and-so," remarks one of the guests in a salon where they are passing their friends under review, "her worst fault is that she is bored wherever she goes." "Suppose," said a lawyer to a witness he was trying to badger recently—"suppose I should tell you that I could bring a dozen men of your town to this courtroom who would say they would not believe you on oath, what would you say?" And calmly the witness made reply, "I would say you lied."

"I don't miss my church as much as you suppose," the Boston Globe reports a lady as remarking to her minister, who had called upon her during her illness, "for I make Betsy sit at the window as soon as the bells begin to chime and tell me who are going to church, and whether they have got on anything new."

A lady whose husband was the champion snorer of the community in which they resided, confided to a female friend the following painful intelligence: "My life has not been one of unalloyed delight. I have had the measels, the chicken-pox, the cholera, the typhoid fever and inflammatory rheumatism, but I never knew what real misfortune was until I married a burglar alarm."

The "lost and found" bulletin boards at the principal seaside hotels are a study. The "lost" side of the board always seems full. People appear to be losing something all the while. Seaside life makes them careless, apparently.—Then, too, on the other hand, the 'found' side of the board never seems to have anything on it. People appear never to find anything.

Wouldn't be Caught.

The editor of the Texas Siftings recently took a trip across the State, and to judge by the following incident he had a lively time:

"Stopping at a water-hole, I dismounted," he says, "and handed the doctor a cup of water. In returning the cup he let it fall on the ground, startling my pony and causing him to run about fifty yards.

"As he stopped and began to graze, I paid no attention to him, expecting, after attending to the demands of my thirsty throat, to walk up to him and mount.

"He let me walk to within five paces of his head. He had no objection to my walk. The fact is, and I regret to bear witness to it, he seemed rather to enjoy seeing me walk.

"Just as I was about to reach out to catch the bridle, he walked off. Then I began to run. So did he. He evidently enjoyed this acceleration of speed on my part, even more than he had previously enjoyed my walking gait. He ran a short distance with his head down, apparently chuckling to himself at my discomfiture; then, throwing his heels up in the air, he cantered around me in a circle, neighing in a derisive manner.

"When I stopped he would stop, and wait until I almost caught up with him. He was always on the alert, however, and stood with his tail elevated, ready to go off at the slightest increase of speed in my movements.

"What added to the interest of the entertainment was, that when the vile mustang started, the coffee-pot and other loose articles of virtu attached to the saddle kept flopping around, increasing his hilarity and causing him to perform gratuitous antics that no one would have thought the brute capable of performing.

"The result of this was that from the moment he started to run, he began shedding my portable property, loose articles first, then the contents of my saddle-bags, one article at a time, leaving a train of tin-ware and notions to mark his erratic course.

"This necessitated following in his tracks, that I might pick up my scattered belongings. Here, a tooth-brush; there, a bar of soap; over yonder, a towel hanging on a withered cactus; and the coffee-pot, with the handle broken and the lid gone, jammed among the thorns; further on, my note-book in a puddle of water, and the photograph of somebody with golden hair smiling at me out of a bunch of violet-colored flowers.

"After two hours spent in fruitless endeavor to catch my pony, and after trying all manner of deceitful devices to entrap him, such as walking up toward him with a handful of choice grass, and offering it to him in the most respectful manner and sweetest tone of voice, and in holding a hat toward him in such a manner as to suggest that it contained about two quarts of shelled corn,—after all this had failed, he caught himself by entangling a rope, that hung loose from his neck, in the branches of a low mesquite."

The Doctor's Secret.

Probably no new development will more surprise the public than to learn the secret of success of leading physicians. When they have a difficult case of throat or lung disease that baffles their scientific skill, they prescribe Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, having it disguised in a prescription bottle, with their own directions and name attached. The patient is cured and they get the credit.—Tribune. Sold by all druggists.

Buckskin Lager.

I find one more entry in my note book taken at Worms. It is mysterious. It is this: "Buckskin lager."

It recalls the joke of the season on the Cook's tourists. Several of the party, eminent alike for virtue, wisdom, piety and learning, had devoutly wandered about the cathedral and traced the paths the sacred and weighty foot of Martin Luther himself had trod. They had been so impressed with the solemnity of the occasion that they became thirsty. A door stood invitingly open near by, as if designed by the shade of Luther on purpose for quenching the thirst of wise men like himself, who properly appreciated wine, women and song. At least so it seemed to the wise and weary tourists. The legend over the door read thus: "Tuch und Buxkin Lager." In point of fact, it was a tailor shop. But the wise followers of Luther thought that "Lager" must necessarily mean beer. They were a bit rusty in their German. They entered in. They held up two fingers, that mystic, Masonic signal recognized the world over, wherever civilization has planted its banners. They looked knowingly at the young man inside, and remarked simply: "Buckskin Lager."

Do you catch on? The young man didn't. He looked amazed, not to say afraid, at these strange men from Western wilds. But at that moment some of the wise men caught a glimpse of the tailor's goose and shears. Then they caught a glimmering. Did they stop to explain? Ask them, if you are brave enough. I wasn't, and there is not much in this world that I would not dare.—E. A., in Cincinnati Commercial.

It appears from experiments that a heaping teaspoonful of Paris green to twelve quarts of water is just as certain to destroy the potato beetle as a larger quantity; but one pound of the poison mixed with 100 pounds of plaster may be applied by the hand, as it is proved by repeated tests that no bad results will follow taking it in the bare hand when mixed in these proportions. The plaster is worth to the crop all the labor expenses.

The Republicans of this county are getting the start of their opponents in the matter of public meeting. Horr has spoken at Hudson, Burrows at at Adrian, and Ed. Willitts delivers three speeches in the county this week.

Politics are getting terribly mixed in New York. Judge Folger has accepted the gubernatorial nomination on the Republican ticket, but the nominee for Congressman-at-large has declined on account of the "circumstances which surrounded the nomination of the ticket." Meanwhile Republican dissatisfaction is on the increase, and the boom for Grover Cleveland is growing stronger.

Henry Ward Beecher is nothing if not sensational. Last Sunday evening, in Plymouth pulpit, he denounced the action of the Saratoga Convention and declared his purpose to vote against the ticket. He maintained that Revenge and Avarice had joined hands to set aside Cornell and nominate Judge Folger, and that he would let his right hand wither before he would vote for a candidate nominated by bribery, forgery and Federal interference.

There having been much said pro and con relative to the temperance position and affiliations of Josiah W. Begole, one of the candidates for Governor of this state, the Detroit Evening News has taken pains to obtain a statement of his present connection with temperance societies. He is a stockholder and member of the State Temperance Alliance, and at this time is connected with no other temperance society. He was at one time president of the Flint Red Ribbon club, but that has now disbanded.

News comes from New York that John I. Davenport has unearthed the mystery of the Morey letter. The name of the forger, he says, is H. H. Hadley, a renegade Republican in the employ of the Democratic National Committee. Hadley got Garfield's autograph by writing to him at Mentor, asking an explanation of the Credit Mobilier business.

Stationary stores were ransacked to find paper similar to that used at Mentor, and then Hadley wrote the famous forgery. An envelope was prepared to correspond with that which Hadley received from Mentor, and put through a process to make it look soiled and worn.

This is a very pretty story, but the facts about that letter show its falsity. The Morey letter was written on the ordinary stationary used in the House of Representatives. Both the paper and the envelope bore the words "House of Representatives, Washington, D. C." The letter was not written on paper similar to that used at Mentor at all, and hence there was no occasion for ransacking the stores to find such paper. The officer must try again.

The penuriousness of railway managers is frequently illustrated when railroad accidents occur. In fact, many of our worst accidents can be traced directly to that cause. The recent collision in the Fourth Avenue tunnel on the Hudson River railroad is a repetition of the same old story. The Inter-Ocean, in commenting upon the affair, says:

William C. Rawson, a telegraph operator 18 years of age, who managed the movements of all the trains on the New York Central & Hudson River, the New York & New Haven, and the New York & Harlem railroads through the tunnel by which they enter the city of New York, has been arrested as responsible for the accident occurring Friday last on the Hudson River railroad, and will be indicted for manslaughter in causing the death of four passengers. That's right, punish the boy! Send him to the penitentiary, and let Mr. Wm. H. Vanderbilt, the president of the road, continue to draw his dividends. The boy confessed before the coroner's jury that his carelessness caused the accident. He said that three or four trains were delayed, and "everybody was yelling at him," so he got excited and confused, and forgot to give some signal or another which might have prevented the collision. He has had each day to govern the speed and stoppage and movements of 198 trains laden with human souls, and has had to act as a signal man at the same time. He is 18 years old, has a salary of $40 a month, and has been in the business nearly a year! What a light is thrown upon railway management by one of these horrible accidents now and then!

THE OBSEQUIES OF JUDGE BEAMAN.

The funeral services in honor of the late Fernando C. Beaman were held at Adrian on Saturday last.

At nine o'clock in the forenoon the Bar of Lenawee county assembled at the court house. Resolutions were read by Judge Stacy, the chairman of the committee previously appointed to draft the same, after which remarks were made by different members of the bar and the resolutions were ordered spread upon the records by his Honor, Judge Howell. We herewith present

THE RESOLUTIONS.

Again is the bar of Lenawee county called to mourn the loss of one of their noblest members and brightest legal intellects. After a struggle of several months with the grim angel, Judge Fernando C. Beaman has obeyed the summons and gone to his eternal rest.

Born in the state of Vermont, of Puritan parents, reared among the hills of northern New York, emigrating to Rochester in early manhood, at the age of twenty-four he came to the then "Far West," and has passed the remaining years of his life as a resident of Michigan.

A biographical sketch of his eventful life is unnecessary here We meet to do honor to his memory, and to extend our sympathy to his afflicted family, and to his mourning neighbors and friends.

Judge Beaman was endowed by nature with a fine legal intellect, which, combined with a robust constitution, an indomitable industry, and incorruptible honesty, gave him a commanding position in our fraternity at an early age. His legal talents, business ability and executive energy, left their impress upon this city in the mayor's office, and upon our county in the important stations of prosecutor and probate judge, while future generations will remember with gratitude the years of earnest and gratuitous labor he gave in organizing and developing the public school system of Adrian.

His political career in congress during the stormy days of rebellion and reconstruction examplified in a remarkable manner the sterling traits of his character. Quick to discern the right and fearless in maintaining it, his cool judgment and keen legal foresight were of inestimable value to the government during those years of national turmoil. And although serving his constituents in Washington at a time when so many fortunes were gained by questionable means, he retired from his decade of congressional service with an unsullied name and an untarnished reputation. He was a disciple of the good old school in which political principle and official rectitude were the guiding stars of action and the stepping stones of perfection.

In his domestic relations the deceased was a model man, an indulgent parent, a devoted husband, and a neighbor whose brilliant social qualities made him a shining light in the city of his residence. The strong arm which could wield the heaviest blow in the heat of a legal or political contest became an infant's plaything in the family circle, and the manly intellect, which never shrank from professional duty or feared an attack of the bitterest opponent, would melt into submission and drop a tear of sympathy over the misfortune of a little child.

To the bar of this county his name and character will always be held in grateful remembrance. His uniform kindness in all legal contests, his urbanity, his high social and moral qualities, elevating the character of the profession and giving it a reputation high above the petty quarrels which in some sections disgrace its members and degrade its character, and which always led the youthful members of the profession to turn to him as a father and teacher and guide, will keep his memory green in our hearts while life shall last.

Toll, ye bells! A distinguished lawyer, an honored citizen, a devoted husband and father, a noble man has fallen.

The bar of Lenawee county direct that the Circuit Judge be requested to spread this feeble testimonial upon the records of the court, and that a copy be transmitted to the family of the deceased. And that a copy of this memorial be furnished the papers of our county and city for publication.

At two o'clock in the afternoon the funeral was held at the late residence of the deceased in Adrian.

The casket occupied a position in the center of the south parlor of the residence, the head resting near the west end of the apartment. It was made of fine black broadcloth, ornamented with heavy mouldings and sunken panels. The lining was of fine cashmere and white puffed satin. The casket handles were of massive silver.

At the head of the casket rested a beautiful floral piece, "The Gates Ajar," of tea roses, carnations, tube roses and calla lilies. Placed upon the casket, or apparently near it, were a star of tube roses and carnations, a pillow of tube roses and heliotropes, with the word "Rest" worked in immortelles, a sickle of tube roses, heliotropes and fever-few, with the suggestive figures "68" in immortelles, a cross of tube roses and smilax, an anchor of tube roses and pink rose buds, a cresent of rose buds, tube roses and carnations, with the initials, "F. C. B." in immortelles, and a wreath of rose buds, roses and carnations. The house was decorated with baskets and bouquets of flowers, while the portraits of the deceased and his son, which hung upon the walls of the room in which the remains lay, were draped with smilax.

The burial services, which were in charge of Rev. J. B. Little, had been announced to commence at 2 o'clock P. M. At that hour the residence, grounds and the streets in the immediate vicinity were crowded with people, all anxious to bear a last tribute of respect to the noble dead. Among those present were Judge Cooley, of the Supreme Bench; Hon. S. S. Wilkinson, of Denison, Iowa; Hon. Edwin Willits, of Monroe, Judge Upson, of Coldwater; Hon. Joel Carpenter, of Blissfield, and Brackley Shaw, of Dover, besides many other distinguished citizens.

The acting pall-bearers were Chas. Humphrey, A. W. Carey, E. I. Waldby, Andrew Howell, F. Hubbard and C. R. Miller. The honorary pall-bearers were C. M. Croswell, W. S. Wilcox, C. E. Weaver, A. L. Millard, Norman Geddes, Chas. Rynd, A. H. Wood, T. M. Cooley, C. A. Stacy and W. Humphrey.

Remarks eulogistic of the deceased were made by Gov. Croswell, Dr. Rynd, Judge Cooley and Rev. Mr. Little, which were very appropriate and impressive. The services were closed with the hymn, "Nearer My God to Thee."

The Ingham county fair held at Mason was a dismal failure in all respects. The many other and greater fairs so near it.

John Smith, of Boston township, Ionia county, lost his barn, wheat and oats by fire last week, and some hogs were also burned. Children and matches did it.

At the Howell fair a lad named Claude Beurman was thrown from a race horse and had a leg broken, and a baby was run over by a dray and severely crushed.

There is a great big divorce case on the tapis in the Lapeer courts, the parties being a wealthy pair named Reed. The Democrat says: "Many of the incidents of the affair are very romantic, being laid at different summer hotels—lounging away the time together on plush sofas—arms lovingly entwined—delightful society—beautiful face — pearly teeth—rosebud mouth—soulful eyes—nice sweet talk—the plot thickens—strolling on the beach at Orion—sandwiches and pickles on the grass—boat-riding on the lake—taffy, etc."

A Good Cyclopedia.

We have heretofore published notices referring to the publication of Green's famous "History of the English People, which is issued by The Useful Knowledge Publishing Co., of New York. Besides the issue in five handsome "Elzevir" volumes, and in one "Model Octavo" volume, it forms a portion of the Cyclopedia of History which is being published at the same house. The plan of the Cyclopedia of History is that it shall contain, unabridged, the great standard works of such authors as Green, Macauley, Grote, Carlyle, Creasey, Schiller, Mommsen, Gibbon and others, with such additions by the editors and special writers as will be necessary to make the Cyclopedia complete and universal in character, unity and convenience of consultation being secured by the publication of the "World's Index of Knowledge" in connection with it.

No Cure for Consumption.

There is no cure for consumption, whether of the lungs, bowels or kidneys; yet the patient may be spared to long years of life, and the fatal termination kept from approaching, if Brown's Iron Bitters are used. This medicine strengthens the weakened parts, restores to healthy action the impaired functions, and stops all decay and wasting away of the organs affected. It is the best life-giving medicine ever invented, and thousands of living witnesses stand ready to affirm the truth of this assertion. A trial bottle will convince you of its merit.

The first shipment of copper over the Ontonagon & Brule River railway was made a few days ago, and the product, which was from the old National mine, was forwarded by boat to Detroit. The National is the first of the old abandoned mines of many years ago that has been opened up again under the influence of the ready means of transportation given by the O. & B. R. road, and it is said there are many more to follow.

An Extraordinary Case.

Austin, Tex., Feb. 20, 1880.

To Mr. J. W. Graham, Druggist:

Dear Sir—My case was an acute form of bronchitis, and was of one and a half year's duration. I employed the best medical aid possible, but failed rapidly, until the doctors said I would die—that my case was incurable. Torown upon my own resources, I got a bottle of Dr. Wm. Hall's Balsam for the Lungs, and in six hours felt a decided relief. In three days the cough almost disappeared. Now that my chances of life are good for many years, I earnestly recommend the above to every sufferer of lung or throat disease.

A BUSINESS IMPROVEMENT.

A Model Dry Goods Store—The Largest and Most Complete in Southern Michigan.

Some years ago the firm of W. & S. W. Anderson was formed in our village for the purpose of transacting a general dry goods business. This firm then occupied a store 25 ft. wide and 60 ft. deep. Three times since that time their business has so increased as to make it necessary to have more room. The firm have now rented the new store lately built by J. W. Patterson, connected it with their old store, and have to-day the largest dry goods house in Southern Michigan outside of Detroit and Jackson. The trade of this firm is one of the widest and greatest helps of Tecumseh, and it has been obtained by strict attention to business and square dealing with customers.

Their present store consists of two large stores fronting on Chicago street, the west part or old store, being used for the general dry goods trade, the east room for the heavier goods, cloaks, furs, curtain fixtures &c. The entrance will be in the west store for the present. Up-stairs is the carpet room, a large apartment used exclusively for their stock of carpets, and for showing them. All the rooms are now filled to overflowing with new goods of every description in the dry goods line, and the firm aim to keep everything found in a dry goods store demanded by their trade.

Besides their stock in the two stores the cellar is filled with duplicate stock to draw from. The purchases are all made in large quantities, and for cash, and thus purchased for the lowest possible price. Fourteen clerks are employed behind their counters. They have adopted the cashier system used by the larger retail stores in the cities, thus taking every pains for the convenience and accommodation of their trade. In addition to their carpet and curtain department they have lately added a large stock of cornice poles and cornices. Anderson's dry goods store is known all over the country, every mail bringing orders from old Tecumseh people and others who have learned their prices and way of doing business.

In addition to the regular stock of such stores they keep a very complete line of the finer goods, such as high priced silks, satins and plushes seldom found in stores outside of cities. All in all we can say that Anderson's dry goods store is an honor to the trade of Tecumseh, bringing trade that never would come to this town if not for this establishment. Every day their trade is increasing, and we wish for them in the future, as in the past, success and prosperity.

HON. EDWIN WILLITS.

His Speech at the Opera House Last Night.

The fall campaign was opened at the opera house last evening with a speech by Hon. Edwin Willits of Monroe. Mr. Willits is well known here, as all over Michigan, and is respected as a man who has faithfully represented his state in Congress, and who has striven to respect the confidence the people placed in him. He did not touch, in his speech last evening, the rabid political issues of the day, but gave a careful account of what Congress had done for the last few years, comparing the expenditures of the Republican and Democratic administrations, explaining fully the river and harbor bill and other appropriations made by Congress. His words were not intended to prejudice anyone, but to ask the people to support honest and judicious legislation. He urged the voters to be present at the caucus and polls, and to carefully weigh the qualifications of the candidate on either side before voting for him.

Mr. Willits was greeted with a good audience and the people were well satisfied with his speech.

A TRAIN OFF THE TRACK.

Five Cars and a Locomotive Ditched on the Jackson Branch—The Engineer Seriously Hurt.

Last Friday forenoon an unusual occurrence took place on the Jackson Branch, being no less than a railroad accident. A special freight train was coming from Jackson in the forenoon, drawn by engine No. 125, Watson Daniels of Adrian acting as conductor. A gang of section men were repairing the track opposite Ed. Smith's farm, about half way between Tecumseh and Clinton, when the special came along. Some new ties had been put in and the men were engaged in fastening the rails upon them. The train was signaled and stopped and after a few spikes had been driven it was signaled to go ahead again. The train pulled out at a good rate of speed and when it struck the track the rails spread throwing the engine and five freight cars into the ditch. The engine was knocked all out of time and the cars were badly wrecked. The engineer, Wm. Maudsley, was seriously injured. Dr. C. M. Woodward, of Tecumseh, was summoned to attend him and he is now improving. The noon passenger train going north was detained between two or three hours before the track could be sufficiently cleared to allow it to pass. The accident was probably the fault of the foreman of the track men, as he signalled the train to go ahead before the rails were sufficiently secured in place.

A PLEASANT EVENING.

Day before yesterday the telephone bell in our lower office was seized with a violent fit of ringing, and in answering the call we heard the pleasant voice of our friend, Woolston Comfort. He was inquiring about a job we were getting out for him, and before the conversation ended, said: "If you will come down to my farm to-morrow night I will fill you up with watermelon, etc., so full that you will not need any more for a month." Now it is needless to say that such an invitation as this could be refused by the average printer—consequently at the appointed hour last evening we started for Mr. Comfort's with a light heart and an empty stomach. At 5:45 we arrived at Comfort's residence, and left there at 6:45. Of what transpired during that hour we have but a faint recollection, he so completely filled the stomach of the hungry printer with edibles which were such a complete surprise to that much abused organ that the mental capacities of the young man were left even in a more dormant condition than usual, and he was started home with happy thoughts, a full stomach, a buggy full of melons, a boquet for mother, and last, but not least, a mammoth quince for the girls to make "sass" of. Mr. Comfort is a man who lives to enjoy life. He has a good business, which takes a portion of his time each day, but in business he does not forget altogether the pleasures of life. Much of his time is occupied with his family, and in entertaining his friends, and we can safely say that our friend Woolston Comfort, surrounded by the comforts which God and industry have given him, makes every day a pleasure for himself and beloved family.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

A new school building in Deerfield was occupied last week.

The weather is very favorable for the Morenci fair this week.

Morenci is strongly agitating the question of building a town hall.

Rev. Denias Dawe has returned from England and is now stopping at Deerfield.

Adrian Times: Deerfield awoke one Monday morning, not long since, and found seven preachers within the village precincts, and the town hasn't seen a well day since.

The Morenci Observer says strong drink has done the business for Tommy Caley, once the owner of a good farm in Fairfield. He has gone over the hills to the poor-house.

Deerfield Record: The Dundee Ledger boasts of a sunflower that is 4 feet and two inches around. That's nothing; come round here once and we'll show you daisies that will cause your sunflower to wilt.

The Hudson Post says: With a candidate on every four corners of the village, Hudson begins to feel as though she was coming up in the world. Would it not be a good plan to erect that new court house here.

Blissfield Advance: The summer-kitchen attached to the house of Geo. Burch caught fire Monday morning from a defective chimney, and but for prompt action, might have resulted more disasterously. As it was, the damage was slight.

Morenci Observer: A base ball nine, composed of such eminent players as Abe Mace, Jabez Snow, Johnny Turpening and others went over to the fair at Adrian on Wednesday to play with the fat men's nine of Lenawee's capital city. A return game is stipulated to occur at our village fair.

Deerfield Record: Heman Pool and family, who have experienced the varying changes of a farm life in Kansas during the past five years, returned last Saturday, overland from that muchly lauded state, and are now content to dwell in Michigan, and near the winding Raisin.

The Clinton lecture course has been laid out as follows: Hon. George R. Wendling, Col. J. P. Sanford, Dr. James Hedley, Rev. J. H. Vincent, D. D., the superintendent of the Chautauqua assembly; Dr. James B. Angell president of Michigan University and ex-minister to China, and the Royal English Bell Ringers. Mr. Wendling will probably appear about Nov. 21.

Blissfield Advance: Col. Drew has purchased the Wheeler House and intends repairing and refurnishing the same from cellar to garret. We are glad to say the Colonel will now permanently remain in Blissfield, as the purchase of the house will relieve him of any apprehension of being obliged to "make room for some one else."—The consideration was the transfer of the farm owned by him at Lyons, O., and receiving in addition $330 in money.

Hudson Gazette: Notwithstanding the general scarcity of apples in this section this season, there are a few farmers north of Hudson that we know will harvest quite a crop of the fruit. Our friend Keagle, for instance, will gather at least 600 barrels from his splendid orchard, and Bishop Ames, Esq., a little way up the road, will have over a thousand barrels to haul to market. Pierce & Son are paying $2,00 and $2,25 per barrel for the product.

CLINTON News: Clinton has had another narrow escape from a big conflagration. When Muir's meat market was opened Thursday morning a dense volume of smoke poured out, the room being full of it. After looking about, a spittoon was found behind the counter nearly burned to a cinder. The fire had also burned nearly through the thick oak floor. If left alone a little while longer, our fire department (?) would have had some work to do.

Hudson Post: At the Democratic county nominating convention, the wisdom there assembled thrust honors unsought upon Hudson. Henry C. Hall, one of the best grocers in Michigan, was nominated by that body for State Senator, and L. H. Salsbury, Esq. honored the party by accepting the nomination of prosecuting attorney on that ticket. Both these men do credit to their party, and will probably come as near an election as any other parties on the ticket. Both are respected citizens of Hudson, and among her prominent business men.

Beauty of the Telephone.

The way it all came about was this. Her husband keeps a grocery store down town, and owing to the highly inflammable temper of his wife, he don't like to linger much around the family hearth-stone, but while away the most of his time within the precincts of his store. The recent introduction of a telephone, however, afforded his wife an opportunity to air her peculiar views on various topics, and the effect on her husband was most discouraging.

One day she called him up and opened out on him at long range in the following style:

"Is that you?"

"Yes," answered her husband, in a hard, unnatural voice.

"It is, eh? All right. I suppose you know what kind of a condition I'm in this morning. After you left me in hysterics I broke all the breakfast dishes and scalded both arms trying to drive Smith's cat out of the house. Oh, you old Beelzebub! If I could keep you home long enough to give you a piece of my mind. It's no use to twit me any more of being a church member. I don't care any more for church or preacher than you do, so now. I've got past that, and every time I see the smirking, hypocritical face of the Rev. ——, I feel just like knocking his head against the wall. And now if you forget to bring up some baking powder and coffee this noon, I'll make a devil of a lively time for you."

When the dinner hour arrived, the unfortunate man ambled homeward, and his wife met him in the doorway.

"Where's that baking powder and coffee?" she hissed, seeing that he was empty-handed and his fine features bathed in an idiotic smile.

"Baking powder and coffee?" he inquired, looking as blank as a board fence, "did you order some?"

"Why, yes; didn't I telephone you about ten o'clock this morning?"

"Me?"

"Yes, you, you old leather head; at least you said 'twas you."

"Why, at ten o'clock I was around at the bank to get some money for Rev. ——. You know you wanted me to pay him some on your subscription to the church, and I left him in the office. It can't be that you gave him the order.—It's singular, too, he wasn't there when I came back. Shouldn't think he'd run away and leave his money."

"Why—why, you said—" but it was too much—much too much. The husband's diplomatic strategy had got in its work. There was no backing out, and the lady could only go around, lugging about a horrible secret, which she now believes is only in the keeping of herself and pastor. And as we go to press there are no developments in this domestic tragedy which warrant us in believing she will ever overcome her antipathy for telephones.—Check.

Surprised.

Hearing a story gravely told about a clam that crawled up a wall, one might reasonably expect that the man who told it had been putting something into his mouth to the damage of his brains; but the following from a Fall River correspondent carries its explanation with it. It seems that a gentleman in Providence, happened to be called into his cellar late one night.

The wind was blowing almost a gale, the rain poured down in torrents, and the night was one to cause a feeling of "uncertainty" in the heart of the bravest.

The gentleman in question never indulges in intoxicating liquors, and there is no reason to suppose that his nerves were unusually disturbed. He is very fond of clams, however, and had a peck of the shell-fish in the cellar, which were to be cooked the next day.

As he descended the stairs, shading the lamp with his hand to shield it from the draught, he saw the bucket of clams at the foot of the stairs. Then he was amazed to see what appeared to be a small white clam move gradually from the bucket, make its way quickly across the cellar floor, and mount the wall at the further side of the cellar to a distance of three feet from the floor.

Never having seen a clam walk before, the gentleman was seriously disturbed. He placed the lamp in a convenient position, took up a piece of barrel-hoop as a means of offence, and moved quickly and softly across the cellar floor.

The white object proved to be indeed a clam, but it had used other means of locomotion than its own. An indiscreet mouse had walked over the bucket and this ambitious clam had fastened its nippers on the mouse's tail. The mouse, frightened, had started for his hole in the wall, but failed to get into it on account of the shell-fish attachment to his tail. Of course the gentleman relieved the mouse of his encumbrance—and was probably somewhat relieved himself.

How a Thoughtless Man Lost a Dinner.

On the day before last Thanksgiving an excellent friend of ours went to market to make provision for his own family, and a number of guests who were expected at his hospitable board. He purchased, as was usual at that season, a noble turkey of considerable weight. Casting his eye about, he discovered a small boy with apparently nothing to do.

"My lad," said he, "I will give you a shilling to carry this bird home."

"Thank you, sir," replied the boy; "I am the one to do it."

The worthy gentleman paid the money on the spot, but called the receiver back to add a bunch of crisp celery and some vegetables to the basket, after which he went on his way. On Thanksgiving morning, the host took his hat and cane for a walk, when he was inquired of in his own house what provision he had made for dinner.

"Why," said he, "we will have that turkey, to be sure. Did you ever see a finer?"

"What turkey?" was asked with marked emphasis.

"Why, that turkey which I sent yesterday. I told a little boy to carry it home, and gave him a shilling for his trouble."

"He has never brought it."

"I see how it is," replied the host, laughing, "I forgot to give him my address, and he has carried it home indeed. The markets are closed now. We must make our Thanksgiving a fast day."—Boston Herald.

Farm and Agricultural Notes.

Nearly 700 bushels of onions per acre were raised last year by George O. Mason of Beverly, Mass.

An average two or three-year-old steer will eat its own weight of different materials in two weeks.

There is no loss in feeding cattle well upon a variety of materials for the sake of manure alone.

Samples of white Russian oats, six feet high, with heads eighteen inches long, have been left at the office of the Indiana Farmer.

American methods of conducting many departments of agriculture are being introduced into almost all parts of the civilized world.

The American wonder or Premium Gempeas, sown in the middle of August with if they escape mildew, make a fair Autumn crop.

In some instances "sprinkling lawns with carbolic acid and water" has been practiced with good effect against the army worm in Connecticut.

The crop of small fruit is excellent in nearly all the Eastern States. The markets are well supplied, and large quantities are being canned.

It is not generally known that a few sprigs of cedar bush, mixed with hay or any kind of litter for hens' nests, will keep them entirely free from hen lice.

Two or three year old cattle will add one-third of a pound more per day to their weight upon prepared hay and roots than upon the same materials unprepared.

The West now surpasses the East in the excellence of its butter and cheese factories. The largest combined factory in the world, it is said, is located at Tremont, Neb.

A correspondent of the Farmer's Review has found a strong docoction of tansy, applied through the fine rose of a watering pot, very effective against the cabbage worm.

The United States is fast becoming, if it has not already become, the first wool-producing country in the world. If it is second, it is second only to Australia, of which wool is the largest product.

Very frequent news items about ghastly deaths from goring by bulls preach effective sermons against horns, and against careless approaches to these generally mismanaged and treacherous beasts.

More labor-saving machines for doing work in fields and gardens have been invented in the United States than in all other countries combined, and these are fast finding their way into all parts of the world.

The general effect of lime is to render available the plant food already in the soil, without itself supplying any significant amount. Liming cannot, therefore, be successfully repeated except at considerable intervals.

There is no wisdom in working a thirty-acre field year after year to get five bushels of wheat or ten bushels of corn to the acre, when with the same expense for fertilizers you could raise fifteen bushels of wheat and thirty bushels of corn to the acre.

A good many farmers in different parts of the country have, by loss of animals during the season, had the fact impressed on their minds that Paris green is a deadly poison, the use of which cannot be too carefully guarded.

Farmers and property-owners should bear in mind that they are required by law to cut Canada thistles on their properties before they go to seed. They are liable for the neglect, and the complainant is entitled to a part of the fine.

A Sharon correspondent of the Connecticut Farmer reports that the practice of spaying cows, tried to some extent in that vicinity, was not profitable "from a milkman's point of view." From the humanitarian standpoint the system is an outrage.

The Gardener's Monthly says: "Let the laundry folks, on every wash day, pour the boiling hot soap-suds about the roots of peach trees. This will destroy the insiduous little fungus which produces the 'yellows' and other diseases, and finish the larvæ of insects which are so injurious to the trees."

"Now, the beauty of a paper collar," remarked the honorable member, coaxing a refractory pin, "is its economy. You wear one a week, then you turn it and wear it another week. Then you split it and you have two new collars with one clean side, good for another week, each of 'em." And adjusting the flat scarf over the red flanned shirt he went down to dinner.—Hawkeye.

Some men have tact. Said the bridegroom, who didn't wish either to offend his bride or die of internal disturbance: "My dear, this bread looks delicious; but it is the first you have ever made. I cannot think of eating it, but will preserve it to show to our children in after years as a sample of their mother's skill and deftness."

"What Ails This Heart of Mine?" is the heading of a story that is going the rounds of the papers. We suppose he saw his girl out riding with another fellow. There is nothing that makes the heart get up and pound ribs and carom on the other vital parts and jump up and down like a churn-dasher, and then get tired and keep so still you think it has stopped beating forever, as to see your girl out riding with another fellow, we are told.

A member of the last legislature, who was less remarkable for the profundity of his knowledge than for the overweening confidence with which he advanced his opinions upon any and all subjects, was asked by a fellow-member of a somewhat quizzical turn of mind, while discussing the New Code, what he deemed the proper punishment for arson.—"Well," said he, with an air of profound deliberation, "I have thought on that subject a good deal, and have come to the conclusion that he should pay a fine of five hundred dollars and marry the girl."

Bay City, Mich., Feb. 3, 1880.

I think it my duty to send you a recommend for the benefit of any person wishing to know whether Hop Bitters are good or not. I know they are good for general debility and indigestion; strengthen the nervous system and make new life. I recommend my patients to use them.

Dr. A. Pratt.

Starting Out.

In setting up a home for two, be satisfied to commence on a small scale. It is too common for young housekeepers to begin where their mothers ended. Buy all that is necessary to work skillfully with; adorn your home with all that will render it comfortable. Do not look at richer homes and covet their costly furniture. If secret dissatisfaction is to spring up, go a step farther, visit the homes of the suffering poor; contrast your own neatly furnished rooms with their cheerless apartments. You will then be prepared to meet your husband with a grateful heart, and be ready to appreciate the toil and self-denial which he has endured in the business world to surround you with the delights of home, and you will co-operate cheerfully with him in so arranging expenses that his mind will not be constantly harrassed lest his family expenditures may encroach upon public payments. Be independent: a housekeeper never needed greater moral courage than she does now to resist the arrogance of fashion. Do not let the A's and B's decide what you shall have, neither let them hold the strings of your purse. You know best what you can and ought to afford. It matters little what people think, provided you are true to yourself, to right and duty, and keep your expenses within your means. Then you may be both independent and happy.

What It Did for an Old Lady.

Coshocton Station, N.Y., Dec. 28, '78.

Gents—A number of people had been using your Bitters here, and with marked effect. In one case, a lady of over seventy years, had been sick for years, and for the past ten years has not been able to be around half the time. About six months ago she got so feeble she was helpless. Her old remedies, or physicians, being of no avail, I sent to Deposit, forty-five miles, and got a bottle of Hop Bitters. It improved her so she was able to dress herself and walk about the house. When she had taken the second bottle she was able to take care of her own room and walk out to her neighbor's, and has improved all the time since. My wife and children also have derived great benefit from their use.

A Youthful Merchant.

A Boston boy, on the Fourth of July, showed that he knew how to make an honest penny by a sober business operation. His father gave him twenty-five cents for spending money for the day. He concluded to see if he could not add a little more to it.

He invested it in sugar and lemons instead of fire-crackers, and, borrowing a pitcher and glass from his mother, and taking ice from the family refrigerator, he made some lemonade, and went into the streets to sell it to the thirsty wayfarers.

By noon he returned with an empty pitcher and a profit of nine cents above his original capital, in which he exulted as much as if it had been as many dollars.

By a judicious expenditure of explosive in the afternoon he was enabled to make himself a greater nuisance to the neighborhood, than he could have done if he had been satisfied with his original possessions. And this, from a boy's standpoint was undeniably a most satisfactory result. Nevertheless, the boy showed that he had some of the qualities that developed make a successful business man.

Don't Trust Them.

When you feel badly, and you have pains here and there in your body that you don't know how to account for, it is the most foolish policy in the world to take the advice of people who say: "Oh, there's nothing the matter with you. Let yourself alone and you will come out all right." These folks know nothing about it, and may be trifling with your life. You may have kidney or liver trouble. Send right out to your druggist and get a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy," and then you will be all right, or write to the Doctor, at Rondout, N. Y.

From Mahomet's Table Talk.

Say not, if people do good to us we will do good to them, and if people oppress us we will oppress them: but resolve that if people do good to you you will do good to them, and if they oppress you oppress them not again.

The world and all things in it are valuable, but the most valuable thing in the world is a virtuous woman.

I am no more than man. When I order you anything with respect to religion, reverence it; and when I order you about the affairs of the world then I am nothing more than man.

Who's the Best Physician.

The one that does most to relieve suffering humanity of the thousand and one ills that befall them, bringing joy to sorrowing thousands, is certainly the best of all physicians.—Electric Bitters are daily doing this, curing hundreds that have tried all other remedies and found no relief.—As a Spring tonic and blood purifier they are a perfect specific, and for liver and kidney complaints have no equal. In the strongest sense of the term, they are positively the best and cheapest physician known. — Daily Times. Sold by all druggists at 50 cts.

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

The Great Healer of all Inflamed Injuries and Disorders.

It is constantly effecting the most wonderful cures, while the unparalleled demand with which it is attended is at once as the greatest medicine and safest for outward application.

The most incredulous are convinced, and the most skeptical are compelled to believe in the virtues of this great remedy.

WHAT IT CURES.

ALL SORTS, CUTS, BRUISES, SPRAINS, BURNS, SORE THROAT, LAMENESS, RHEUMATISM, PILES, INFLAMMATION of LUNGS and BOWELS, BRONCHITIS, CROUP, SALT RHEUM, FEMALE AFFECTIONS of the SPINE, BACK, NERVOUS IRRITATION, and all diseases attendant with INFLAMMATION.

It never fails to restore the natural functions of the skin and equalize the circulation of the blood; this means a controlling power is gained over the most malignant forms of disease. It penetrates every portion of the human frame; every bone, muscle, vein, nerve, and ligament is searched and made sensible to its soothing and healing influence. Hence it copes readily with internal as well as external diseases.

Over 40 Years

This Ointment has been used by the people throughout the United States, and our confidence in its qualities is such, that as we have no space here to insert any of the numerous certificates of cures which we have from all parts of the country we simply ask those readers of this notice who have never used this Ointment, to frankly state their experience with it to inquiring friends. If but one in a hundred would do this we should feel perfectly satisfied with the result. Full directions for use will be found on pamphlet around each bottle.

IT IS NOT A CO-OPERATIVE LIST.

IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST.

IT IS AN HONEST LIST.

The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $2 to $80. The price for one inch one month in the entire list is $625. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,980.14. The list includes 932 newspapers of which 167 are issued DAILY and 765 WEEKLY. SAD ACCIDENT.

MR. OSCAR CRAIGG Blown up by a Premature Blast in the Rosendale Cement Quarry—DESTRUCTION OF an EYE—Its Subsequent Removal by Surgical Operation.

Mr. Oscar Craigg was foreman in a cement quarry at Rosendale, Ulster county, N. Y. By an explosion one day in the quarry he lost an eye—lost it totally. Under the impression that the matter was less serious the local physician told Mr. Craigg that his eye was not lost wholly, but could be saved by treatment. The experiment was tried and failed. Worse remained behind, for he was in danger of losing the other also, through sympathetic inflammation. In this strait he consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told him the injured eye must be taken out to save the other. To this Mr. Craigg demurred, and went back home in doubt. His local physician said: "Go back to New York." To New York the patient went, and one of the most eminent oculists in the country, having looked at the case, said: "You have lost one eye entirely; go back and do what you can to save the other." Briefly, Dr. Kennedy removed the ruined eye and treated Mr. Craigg with "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" to build up the system, and the result was successful.

Dr. Kennedy's great success as a Surgeon is due to the use of "Favorite Remedy" in the after treatment.

Are you troubled with Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Constipation or derangement of the Kidneys and Bladder? then use Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." It will not disappoint you. Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

A DAILY EVENT!

The Receipt of Letters Like the Following:

COMMONWEALTH, Wis., July 20, '82.
DR. PENGELLY:—Please send me one more of your Zoa-Phora. The one bottle I have used has done wonders. I have been under doctors' care more or less for five years. Have suffered from Inflammation, Ulceration and Prolapsus Uteri, weakness and heavy head, in fact felt worn out, not able to sit up. I am feeling just splendid now, and shall continue Zoa-Phora until cured. MRS. N. W. HAMAR.

From Mrs. John Spitler, No. 28 Wilt St., Fort Wayne, Ind.:
I have been suffering for over 16 years with spasmodic pain in my head, and general nervous debility. I had a severe attack of pain in my head two weeks ago, caused by weakness and nervous exhaustion. I really thought I should die. We had Zoa-Phora in the house, and my husband said we would test it to the uttermost. He gave it to me, according to directions, for several cases, and in less than two hours, to his great satisfaction, I had what he called immediate relief, and felt like going to sleep. I advise all ladies who suffer with nervous or sick headache, or any form of female weakness, to use your Zoa-Phora, for there is no medicine to compare with it.
May 15th, 1882.

JERSEYVILLE, Ill., April 25, '82.
DR. PENGELLY—Dear Sir:—I am more than pleased with the effects of your Zoa-Phora in our daughter's case. I am surprised to see how she has improved. She is gaining in weight and color; her nerves are steady, and the distress she suffered in her chest is entirely all gone. I firmly believe that Zoa-Phora is all that saved her. I am willing you should use my letter, for I am not afraid to tell what a wonderful cure your medicine is, and I would like all who suffer to try it.
Yours Respectfully,
MRS. SARAH RANDOLPH.

I shall always remember gratefully the good health your medicine has brought my daughter.
LEWIS RANDOLPH.

The average height of the British guards sent to Egypt is stated to be five feet ten and a half inches, as against five feet ten inches in 1851.

For the first time in its history a gloom has been cast over an interior Texan town by the death of a "good man."

By actual count of the Geneseo (N. Y.) Republican, there are in that village 207 unmarried ladies of marriageable age, and but 55 unmarried men.

Wild turkeys are reported as more numerous than usual this season of the year throughout the west of Texas and on the line of the railroads.

Twenty years ago there were fifteen hundred boats on the Lehigh canal, and now there are not five hundred.

Brandied soda water is a drink that is sold in large quantities at the soda fountains in the London drug stores.

The people of the United States drink about 70,000,000 gallons of whisky a year. No wonder that there are so many snake stories.

Large numbers of hogs have recently been purchased in Ohio and Illinois to be sent to Georgia to be fattened. There is something refreshingly novel in this.

It is proposed to open the Tennessee Southern railroad to New Orleans within a year. Three intermediate and partly built roads are to be consolidated with it.

A physician falls into a fit while making a round of visits, and is carried into a drug store. "Send for Dr. X——," says somebody. "No, no, not for him," says the dying man, feebly, at the mention of his rival's name; "if he brought me round it would advertise him. I prefer to die."

Lake George as a summer resort has made a marvelous leap into popularity. Twelve years ago there were only four hotels there. Now sixty hotels line the sides of the lake and dot the islands. The four or five thousand tourists who used to visit the lake have increased this year to forty or fifty thousand.

North Carolina is getting famous for its "varbs." One day recently fifteen hundred pounds of roots and herbs were shipped from Shelby to New York. A shipment of similar importance was made the week before, and another of cherry bark, butterfly root, tansy, and catnip was to follow speedily.

A gentleman, while working on a new building at San Jose, Cal., the other day, discovered a tarantula hole in the ground, in which were three large tarantulas and a kind of shell or cocoon, which was supposed to contain tarantula eggs. The shell was broken and he counted three hundred young ones.

The project of cultivating oysters in Salt lake, Utah, is regarded thereabouts as impracticable, as there is in the lake no suitable food for oysters, and artificial feeding would be unprofitable, while there is danger that the mud and salt that is carried into the lake each spring would smother the oysters.

Henry Johnson was sold on the auction block, in King and Queen county, Virginia, when eighteen years of age. He served General Dick Taylor until he was transferred to General Andrew Jackson's household. He was with General Jackson at the battle of New Orleans. He is now living at Oberlin, at the age of 109 years.

New Orleans claims to lead in rose growing. There may be seen in that city a Lamarque rose vine with a stem eight inches thick. In some private gardens there are 100 varieties. The favorite rose is the Gold of Ophir. It is small, of very pale pink, shading toward the heart into deep, rich gold color, while faint streaks of crimson touch the outer petals.

The ex-King Cetywayo still sticks to beef as the chief article of his diet.—English beef he considers good, but not so good as that of his own country, for there is too much fat about it. The other day fourteen pounds had been prepared for his breakfast and that of his three chiefs. The latter ate thirteen pounds before Cetywayo made his appearance, so a fresh supply had to be cooked.

The operator of the Mobile office of the Mobile and Gulf Telegraph Company was recently surprised by hearing over his wire through messages from New Orleans to New York. An investigation showed that an unfortunate frog had found its way into a cable box, and its body, burned almost to a crisp, formed a sufficient connection between the Western Union and the Mobile and Gulf wires.

The story is told that in Schuyler county, New York, there is a young-old man, who without apparent cause, living plainly on a farm, has in eighteen years passed through the physical changes of four-score. At the age of 6, he had all the development of strength and muscle usual in a lad of 15. At 12 his beard was grown and gray hairs appeared. Now, at 18, he is decrepit as an old man of 80, and seems tottering on the verge of the grave.

The graziers of Australia and New Zealand, of late years have reckoned the rabbits as their worst enemy. In many districts those prolific creatures have left so little grass that the sheep have been kept from starvation only by their transfer to other localities. Some idea of the size of this invading army of rabbits may be gained from the fact that two "rabbit preserving factories," one at Colac and the other at Camperdown, have been known to destroy 60,000 of the pests in a single week.

Herbert Spencer in America.

The visit of Herbert Spencer to this country cannot fail to be greeted with pleasure by all intelligent Americans. Few of his many admirers, indeed, are likely to see him; for he comes without any intention of speaking in public, and expects generally to go about very quietly. But, whether one actually sees him or not, there is a certain sort of pleasure in feeling that one to whom we owe so much is at last in our country, and is coming into daily contact with our ways of living and thinking. The people of the United States may fitly welcome Mr. Spencer as a friend. It has been said—and, we believe, with truth—that he has found a greater number of intelligent and sympathetic readers in this country than in England. This sympathy may be partly due to the strongly democratic character of Mr. Spencer's political philosophy. His earliest work, "Social Statics," has always found many interested readers in America; and, although in some respects it does not represent the author's matured opinions, there can be no doubt it is the very best text-book of sound democratic political philosophy that has ever been published. It is a pity that all our legislators could not have its wise lessons instilled into their minds in early youth, even as one learns how to compute compound interest or studies the rudiments of history or geography. Much jobbery and much ill-advised legislation would doubtless be prevented.

Popular as the "Social Statics" has been, it was only ten years after its publication that it began to be known in America. Thirty years ago foreign literature found its way to this country much more slowly than at present. It was in 1860 that Mr. Spencer's name began to be somewhat generally known to American readers; and the book to which this popular reputation was primarily due was the little book on "Education, Intellectual, Moral and Physical," which was published in America in that year, before its publication in England. This admirable little book has been very widely read.

The influence of Mr. Spencer's views is to be seen very plainly in the changes which have taken place in our system and methods of education during the past twenty years. Not only has there been a very marked increase in the relative quality of scientific study, but there has also been a notable improvement in our methods of teaching. To abandon rote-learning, to stimulate instead of repressing the natural curiosity of the pupil, to strengthen the observing faculties and the judgment, and, as far as possible, to appeal to whatever native ingenuity the pupil may possess—these are the chief desiderata in teaching.—Century Magazine.

A Northern Waterway.

Grand Things Predicted for the Commerce of the Athabasca River.

The project of the Hudson's Bay company in putting a steamboat on the Athabasca river is a movement that promises the most important results to that far-off country, and is one of the most daring of the many flights of enterprise that have marked the opening up of the northwest, and much greater than their other act of building a tramway around Grand Rapids and putting steamers on the Saskatchewan. When a railway is built across an unopened country, a line of settlement is sure to follow, and to contribute largely to furnishing traffic for it; but this case is widely different, for its mission will be to open up a country at present unsettled by any save the employes of the Hudson's Bay company, some missionaries, a few traders, and a mere handful of men who have gone in this season to test the agricultural capabilities of the country to which the Athabasca affords the readiest access, and which is reported as being equal in fertility to any part of the continent. The steamer in question is no mere toy affair, but will be worthy of the noble stream it is to ply upon. It will be provided with powerful machinery of the most modern character, only equaled by that of the new steamer now being placed on Saskatchewan.

Few people can form an adequate conception of the difficulties to be overcome in taking the ponderous machinery overland to its destination, nor the amount of labor that will be involved in getting the necessary timber and material ready in those remote regions, where everything is done by hand, and where skilled workmen of the various classes necessary to construct the vessels must all be taken in by the company. Capt. Smith, so favorably known on the Saskatchewan, will probably be sent north to superintend the construction of the new vessel. The machinery, etc., were taken to Cariton a short time ago and dispatched to their destination by the company's ordinary route. The successful working of this boat will give an impetus to travel and trade that will soon make the present organized territories, with their lines of steamers and railways, seem to be among the central if not the eastern territories. This boat will be the pioneer in opening up a system of magnificent water-stretches far grander and of greater extent than the famed St. Lawrence system.—Saskatchewan Herald.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The resignation of W. H. Wickersham, United States minister at Copenhagen, Denmark, has been received at the state department.

Mr. L. Z. Leiter is here looking for a house to rent for the season. He and his family will spend the winter here. If he finds it agreeable, as most people do, he will make this his winter residence.

The postoffice commission in a report on the Philadelphia office suggests that it would be well for the government to perform all wagon service in large cities with its own horses and wagons.

The gross receipts for the postoffice department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, have been $41,363,317.10, against $36,217,311.55 the previous year. The receipts to extend the labors of so important a body. The expenses up to date are nearing $50,000.

THE EDMUNDS BILL.

Judge Black has completed his argument adverse to the constitutionality of the Edmunds bill and the acts of the Utah commissioners under it, though the argument has not yet been formally filed with Secretary Teller, to whom it is addressed. Judge Black charges that under Senator Hoar's amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill Gov. Murray appointed about a hundred county officers, which he had no right to do, the act only authorizing him to appoint certain election officers, wherefore Judge Black as counsel for the Mormon church demands the recall of the governor. The argument also claims that the commissioners have violated the constitution in the form of a test oath that they adopted to be taken as a condition of registration, and finally that the act is unconstitutional and the commissioners have exceeded any powers congress had a right to confer.

A CRANE ON THE DOME OF THE CAPITOL.

A nervy young man attracted much attention recently by frisking around on the outside of the capitol dome. He calls himself George Harmon, from Canada, and says that he will do it again. Speaking of some of his previous exploits, he said: "Last summer I balanced myself on the railing of the great iron bridge which spans the Mississippi at St. Louis, and after walking about on the rail for a while I stood gazing into the muddy waters below, when a watchman stole up behind me and seized me. He thought I wanted to attempt suicide, and it was almost impossible to convince him that it was but innocent amusement on my part. He wanted to arrest me. I have done the same thing on the suspension bridge at Niagara Falls." Then he continued, during a moment of inspiration: "While at Niagara I clambered over the brink over-hanging the Sturgeon rock, 185 feet above the stone shore below, and stood upon a small slate shelf, gazing into the seething torrent below, to the great horror of numerous spectators on the American shore, but it's nothing when you get used to it."

HERBERT SPENCER AT THE CAPITAL.

Mr. Herbert Spencer, the great English philosopher, is in Washington. He wanders about during Sunday, accompanied by his friend, Mr. Lown, peering into the store windows, and dropping into the public buildings, as the fancy suits. They are both very deliberate in their movements. Mr. Lown is evidently the leader on all voyages of discovery. It is an interesting spectacle to watch the author of "Principia" balancing himself on the edge of a curbstone, while his companion points out some object on the other side of the street to be investigated. The spectator sees a man of medium height, rather sparely built, with a long face, slight mutton-chop whiskers, complexion full and ruddy, and an immense pair of spectacles concealing his eyes; a soft felt hat of gray color and remarkable shape and size is pulled down on the back of his head, making a sort of nimbus, and the masses of grayish hair escaping from under it rather strengthen the nimbus impression. As he comes nearer the impression received at a distance that his clothes do not fit him is confirmed, but a steady, firm tread and a pair of broad-soled English walking-shoes show that the distinguished foreigner is accustomed to walking. His companion, who is of heavier build and seems older, is said to be prominent in literary circles in England. Mr. Spencer announced when he came to this country that he came for rest, and did not wish to be troubled with receptions and other attentions. Since he has been here he has received no visitors, and has made no visits.

AN ILL-CHOSEN SITE.

A citizen writes to a Washington paper as follows: "Among the acts passed during the late session of congress was one appropriating $400,000 for a pension office building. It appears that the site selected is the cow-yard on B street, between Hooker's division and Murder bay. The cow-yard is situated on the lowest ground in the city, but little if any above ordinary high tide. The old canal lately filled up ran through it, and it is frequently covered with the overflow water of the B street sewer. A year or two ago the yard and its locality were covered with six feet of water during a freshet. It is a bottomless bog, and no building can be erected upon it except by piling. A cellar or basement could only be used for propagating sightless fish, and even the first floor of the building would have to be at least seven feet above grade to insure against overflow. As to its surroundings, the cow-yard is bounded on the north by low groceries and houses of nameless character, junk-shops, soap-grease and guano stores, on the east by horse and cattle bazaars, tar, turpentine, and yellow stores, depots for hides, hair, bones, old iron, and rags, grain, lime, plaster, and cement houses, with stores, stalls, and sheds used as a country market. On the south by the B street sewer, manure, malaria, and Smithsonian grounds; on the west by saw and planing mills, iron foundries, livery stables, lumber yards, asphalt works, gin mills, and the filthy old rookeries of Murder bay. To reach the locality from Pennsylvania avenue you are compelled to pass through the lowest and vilest section of the city, not safe for gentlemen at night or ladies by day. And this is the site selected for this building containing records of incalculable values, endangered to destruction by fire from the combustible nature of its surroundings; and all in the name of economy. The government seizes upon the city free market place in the city, for the alleged reason to save the expense of the purchase of a lot. Economy? Why, it will cost twice the amount to obtain a foundation in the cow-yard that a good-sized lot in a suitable location would have cost. Is it too late for the blunder to be corrected?"

DAVID DAVIS TO BE MARRIED.

Some gossip of an interesting nature is rife concerning the reported matrimonial engagement of Acting Vice President David Davis to Miss Annie Green, of Leavenworth, N. C. In the social circles in which the portly figure of Judge Davis is noted last winter, it is known to be a fact. Last winter Judge Davis, immediately after his recovery from an attack of [illegible] loomed up as a figure in society and [illegible] for a time the gayest of the gay. At the [illegible] receptions he appeared [illegible] active.—Indeed he seemed so young and [illegible] that it was commented on by the newspapers. He never appeared without a boutonniere in the lapel of his spiketail, and was always seen with a blushing maiden hanging on his arm. At private receptions he was the center of attraction. It can be said that ladies in society who invited receptions looked upon him as a great catch, and, despite his proportions, Judge Davis managed to get around with as much agility as a youngster, to the delight of numerous hostesses. During his flirtations the great national heavy weight met, wooed and won Miss Annie Green at the residence of a lady friend in this city. This occurred just prior to the adjournment of Congress and was made known to a select circle of friends at the famous dinner that Davis gave at Wormley's. After that, among his most intimate friends, Judge Davis was the butt of many jokes, but he braved the current and continued his devotions. Miss Green is said to come from one of the oldest families in North Carolina. She is not pretty, but very fascinating, and consequently attractive. Her people are rich and the match is regarded by their friends as an excellent one. Jokes are out concerning the heavy responsibility that the lady has taken upon herself, but it is believed by those who are intimate with both that the acting Vice President will make a good husband. Miss Green is the daughter of Colonel Wharton Green, the present Democratic nominee for Congress from the Wilmington District, to succeed Shackelford.

with clerks from the adjutant general's office working on the pension-rolls. Upon examination, however, it was found that the rooms were not in a fit condition to be occupied. The expensive copper roof, which has been in use but a few years, was found to leak badly, while the plastering, done at an enormous expense, was cracked and broken, and was continually dropping down. Extensive and expensive repairs are now in progress and will occupy a fortnight.

Gen. Eppa Hunton believes the democrats will carry all the Virginia districts except those of Norfolk and Petersburg, now represented by republicans. The general says that Mahone is making many enemies among his former allies, and the results will be apparent when the votes are counted. A government official, who has been traveling in Virginia, confirms this prediction of disaster to Mahone. If Mahone is beaten, it will be because he didn't know when to stop. His circular to the chairmen of the coalition county committees, asking them to recommend each two negroes as laborers, and one mechanic, regardless of color, for employment in the Norfolk navy-yard was all right as a piece of political management, but in his effort to renominate by his own decree every coalition candidate for congress he has aroused much hostility.

RUMORED CABINET CHANGES.

Regarding rumored cabinet changes, it may be authoritatively stated that Secretary Frelinghuysen has an understanding with the president that he is not only willing to retire, but anxious to give up all work, and seek the rest his years and services entitled him to. A high official here says there will be a new attorney general in less than six weeks.

SECURED A JOB.

It is understood that Mr. J. Stanley Brown, President Garfield's private secretary, will become chief clerk of the geological survey, in place of Mr. James Pilling, who resigns. Mr. Brown was connected for some time with Maj. Powell's surveys, and if this appointment can be so regarded it will be the first recognition he has received of the delicate, fatiguing duties he so admirably performed during the president's illness.

POSTMASTERS CLAIMS.

Congress at the late session passed a bill providing for the transfer of claims of postmasters for money and stamps stolen from postoffices to the court of claims, and authorizing the presentation of such claims to the postoffice department before being passed upon judicially. Already about fifteen hundred such claims, mostly for small amounts, have been filed with the postoffice department, and these, after being examined, will be carried to the court of claims for decision. The effect of this law will be to relieve congress from an annoying class of claims, and to send them where they properly belong—to a legal tribunal for settlement.

THE JEANNETTE RECORDS.

The private letters and journals of Lieut. De Long, of the Jeannette, will be handed to his widow whenever she comes to claim them. The other records will remain in the care of Mr. Melville until they are produced at the official investigation soon to be held at the department to inquire into the loss of the vessel and other misadventures of the expedition. These records are of the greatest historical value, and were preserved with extraordinary care by De Long to the end. When they were starving, one of the very last acts of De Long was to attempt to take them to a place of safety. When published, they will be found of great interest, and will shed much new light on the work of the expedition. Mr. Melville says a small portion of them has as yet been printed, and that the books contain a large number of careful maps and sketches.

"DESPISED PENNIES.

Complaints have been received at the postoffice department from various places in the west that postmasters refused to receive pennies in exchange for stamps the reason being that such small coins are not current in that high priced section. Acting Postmaster General Hazen Monday informed these postmasters that they were acting contrary to section 3,587, which makes minor coins of the United States legal tenders in amounts not greater than 25 cents. The last complaint came from the commanding officer at Fort Bidwell, Col., to the secretary of war. The soldiers at that post receiving these small coins for their pay were put to inconvenience because the postmaster refused to receive them.

MILITARY CHANGES.

Maj. Gen. John M. Schofield has been assigned to the command of the military division of the Pacific and the department of California, from the 15th day of October, 1882, the date upon which the present commander, Maj. Gen. Irvin DeDowell, will, by operation of law, retire from active service. Gen. Schofield has been ordered to San Francisco, and on the day named will relieve Maj. McDowell. The vacancy in the number of major generals has stirred up a lively fight among the senior brigadiers, but the leading aspirant appears to be Gen. John Pope. The other brigadier generals are E. O. Howard, Alfred H. Terry, Christopher C. Augur, George Crook, and Nelson A. Miles.

THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

The Washington Tariff Commission arrived in full pomp at Baltimore Friday. Hereafter the commissioners will travel as private gentlemen, availing themselves of ordinary railway accommodation. A little uneasiness is said to exist in regard to the presentation of their report, which, according to the statute creating the commission, is due to congress on the first Monday in December. Several of the commissioners think that the time for reporting should be extended. It has been suggested that with a little diplomacy the per diem and necessary expenses may be continued until March or later. The general opinion is, however, that the universal disgust at the proceedings of the commission is so great that congress, out of respect for itself, cannot afford

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The English military review at Cairo was watched through the bars of the prison windows by Arabi Pasha and Toulba Pasha. The khedive placed over his canopy the union jack and the Egyptian flag. Admiral Seymour and the naval brigade have returned to Alexandria.

James Kelly, one of the oldest residents of Pittsburg, who was worth $5,000,000 in 1872, died Friday almost a pauper. While he gave liberally to charities and endorsed notes for all his friends, he fought public schools and the tax-gatherers, and resisted the annexation of his lands to the city.

Five desperate men who recently robbed the express office at Greenville, Pennsylvania, were jailed at Mercer, where they made their escape by gagging and binding everybody in authority, locking fifteen other prisoners in their cells.

General Sherman, acting as secretary of war, has accepted the resignation of George Stoneman, as colonel on the retired list, after thirty-six years of service. Stoneman is the democratic candidate for governor of California, and has a large income from his farm in that state.

In the Baptist church at Hampton Cross Roads, Virginia, during service, Jerry Cox and Levi Bryson drew revolvers and fired wildly about for some time, Bryson being killed. The preacher went calmly on with his sermon, while the audience shrieked with terror.

A colored miser of Philadelphia, sporting the name of Rev. Joshua Provine Bond Eddy, died in a filthy hut, leaving $100,000 to a brother. He was born in Virginia in the last century, traveled a circuit in New Jersey, married a daughter of Bishop Allen, and became soured against humanity on learning of her infidelity.

The citizens of Bridgewater, Massachusetts, are very indignant over the marriage of a granddaughter of the late Hon. Artemus Hale to a divorced man from Denver named Henry A. Blake. Believing that the scheme was pre-arranged between the parties, a mob of twenty-five men and boys serenaded them with fish-horns and tin pans.

George Painter, a half-breed Indian, residing near De Witt, Missouri, while gliding home in a wagon with three neighbors, killed Robert Williams and shot James Anderson with almost fatal effect. He was found guarding his victims on the road, but took to the brush, where he was captured and taken to jail.

A coal-slide in the Dodson mine at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, caused an explosion of fire-damp, killing one man and seriously burning four others. The track of the Lackawanna road settled three feet for a space of several hundred yards. A similar occurrence at Lonaconing, Maryland, buried four men, who will probably recover.

An agent of a Chicago iron-mill picked up one hundred workmen at Wheeling, West Virginia, and had them ready for the train, when a request was made by a manufacturing firm that the men wait a day. The agent consented to the delay rather than bring the party to Chicago only to have them return to their homes.

A gallery in the Exposition building at Pittsburg gave way Monday evening, carrying several persons and a piano and two organs thirty feet to the floor, injuring seven persons, two of them fatally. Soon afterward two more were hurt just outside the building by the collapse of a temporary shed on which they stood to witness the fireworks.

George Ames, grandson of the late Bishop and nephew of Senator Booth, became insane on his way from Washington to Indianapolis. Having locked himself in his room for two days without food, it was deemed time to send him to a private asylum. He sprang past the landlord of a hotel at Richmond, Indiana, and threw himself from a third story window, alighting head first on the stone pavement, and there is little hope of his recovery.

The iron manufacturers of Wheeling have held out for a reduction of wages to Pittsburg prices, but were driven to offer the old rates by the departure of a train-load of skilled workmen to Chicago. The proposition of the mills was rejected by the Amalgamated association. The Laughlin company decided to sign the scale and start its fires, but other manufacturers want time to consider the matter.

The Hillsdale crew arrived at Philadelphia Sunday, and, after holding an informal reception at the Colonnade hotel, left for Michigan. They declined a banquet at the hands of the Schuylkill navy. They attribute their troubles in England to the bitterness of Brickwood, who was removed from a judgeship at the Centennial regatta for unfair decisions, and has since been the foe of every American crew which crossed the Atlantic.

Ex-Governor Ramsey, of the Utah commission, states that the leading polygamists offered to make no attempt to vote, and have kept their word. The Mormons can carry the elections by large majorities, and will probably nominate Mayor Kane, of Salt Lake, for delegate in congress. The effect of the Edmunds law will be the eradication from politics of all the able and wealthy men of the Mormon church.

The latest diplomatic row at Constantinople arose over the refusal of the Turks to permit the landing of laborers who had been engaged with the British expedition to Egypt. They were allowed to pass the Dardanelles on the demand of Lord Dufferin, but armed police forced them to remain on the Russian steamer which brought them from Port Said. A second effort by the British minister was rewarded by the release of the laborers.

The Japanese envoy to Corea, after laboring for twenty days, secured a pledge that the insurgents should be punished, their victims properly buried, that a half million yen should be paid as indemnity, and that the Japanese legation should have the protection of a body of its own troops. The Chinese ambassador then took four thousand of his soldiers and carried off the chief Corean assassin. The American minister to China dispatched the Monocacy to Corea to watch events.

The khedive of Egypt has decided to grant amnesty to all officers from captain downward, except those who participated in the riots or donned uniforms since the campaign commenced. The ministers have framed decrees for a special commission to prosecute all acts of rebellion, a court-martial at Cairo to try cases for the commission, and another at Alexandria to act upon cases submitted by tribunals. The powers expect to be solicited by England to express their views on the situation in Egypt.

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

Of Duchess Co., N. Y., 80 Years of Age, Suffered Continually for Many Years From Stone in the Bladder.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the world. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office; for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable, and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

The Reasons Why

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," for sale by all druggists.

AROUND THE COUNTY.

RIDGEWAY.

Rev. G. H. Field gave some of his friends a short call on Wednesday.

Where does a certain man get that which intoxicates?

Nathan Ellis, of Clinton county, is calling on numerous friends and relatives.

Remember you must all register this fall if you expect to vote.

Many Republicans here rather have C. L. Lowe chairman of the board of supervisors than Bill Hill, of Palmyra.

The campaign will be opened by the Republicans here on Friday evening next week. Col. L. E. Crandall, of Dundee, is to address the meeting.

Miss Ella Hell has very acceptably acted as organist during her stay with us this season, and as she contemplated returning to Brooklyn Thursday all the members of the choir, about twenty in all, concluded to drop in on Wednesday evening for a little surprise party. A continuous program of music was finally interrupted by the chorister, Mr. William R. Wilson, who approached the piano while Miss Ella was producing an instrumental selection, and in a few very appropriate remarks presented her, in behalf of the choir, an elegant album and a choice work of Tiffany. The whole affair was an entire surprise to Miss Hall, and during her affecting response many eyes were moistened on account of the true and genuine good feeling Miss Hall has won from the members of the choir.

ADDISON.

A seventeen-year-old son of Mr. H. J. Parker, of Addison, was fatally injured by falling on Saturday afternoon last. The young man had been playing in the grist and flowering mills for some time with other boys smaller than himself, and as near as the facts can be ascertained attempted to jump over the corner of a large opening in the floor of the first story, and jostling against some elevators which are close by the opening, failed to secure a proper footing on the other side, which precipitated him head foremost into the pit below, a distance of nearly 30 feet. When picked up by workmen he was insensible, as he continued until Sunday afternoon, when he died. The left shoulder and temple were terribly mangled by the fall, as he struck full force upon the heavy timbers which had been arranged for removing the old machinery from the wheel house. The mill is undergoing preparations to receive a new wheel and set of connecting gearing, and it is owing to this fact that the opening spoken of in the floor was allowed to remain. Funeral services were conducted over the remains of the dead boy on Tuesday, at the M. E. Church. The grief-stricken family have the sympathy of all who know the circumstances.

Detroit Excursion.

A cheap excursion train will visit Detroit over the L. S. & M. S. Railway on Wednesday next, October 18. The fare for the round trip has been fixed at the very low figure of $1.25. In order that there may be no vexatious delays waiting for other trains, a special train has been chartered, which will run on the following time:

" Norvell	6:40	A. M.
" Manchester	6:55	A. M.
" Clinton	7:10	A. M.

Arrive Detroit	9:50	A. M.

Returning, the train will leave Detroit at 6:10 P. M.

Excursionists will have eight hours in Detroit to transact their business or to visit the many attractions of the city. Tickets will be on sale at the ticket offices on and after Monday Oct. 16th, '82.

Marengo, Mich., Sept. 19, '81.

Mr. J. D. Kellogg—Dear Sir: I have been troubled with rheumatic neuralgia for years, and your Columbian Oil has done me more good than anything else I ever used. When I commenced using it I was not able to be out of the house, and after using the oil once I was able to ride about. Please send one-half dozen large bottles by express. Respectfully,

AUGUSTUS LUSK.

THE Macon Center Red Ribbon club will reassemble on Saturday evening, Oct. 21st, at which time a volunteer program will be called for. Let there be a good response.

BUSINESS men should avail themselves of the $1.25 rate to Detroit, Oct 18th.

A boy named George Richardson fell into Black river, at Port Huron on the 5th, and was drowned.

PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

The Prohibitionists met in County Convention at Workingmen's Hall in Adrian on Monday last. Edwin Taylor was called to the chair, and J. W. Dewey was made secretary.

Remarks were then made by different delegates present in regard to the prospects; and the general opinion seemed to be that the party should go to work vigorously and push the canvass. The convention then adjourned till afternoon.

Upon assembling after dinner John H. Osborn, of Tecumseh, was made permanent chairman, and Mr. Dewey was continued as secretary.

The convention then proceeded to nominate a ticket.

The first place in order was that of State Senator. The ballot resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes	38
Z. Cook	22
Wm. Cornelius	11
J. W. Dewey	5

Mr. Cook was declared the unanimous nominee.

A nomination for sheriff was declared next in order, and it went on without remark, no name being mentioned for the candidacy. The ballot resulted as follows:

Whole number of votes	34
Wm. Derbyshire	9
A. P. Kimball	10
E. A. Taylor	3
J. H. Osborn	2
J. C. Rowley	7
C. Bidwell	3

A formal ballot was ordered, and before it was taken the chairman withdrew his name, saying that he expected to be elected auditor-general of the State, and did not want to be sheriff. The ballot resulted:

Whole number of votes	44
A. P. Kimball	40
Scattering	4

For county clerk, Dr. L. S. Town, of Rollin, was nominated, but he declined in favor of J. O. Beal, of the same town:

Whole number of votes	38
J. O. Beal	30
Dr. Town	5
Porter Beal	2
J. R. Kempton	1

J. O. Beal was made the unanimous nominee.

Fred. W. Day, of Morenci, was named for treasurer by acclamation.

John W. Dewey, of Cambridge, and W. P. Luke, of Ogden, were named for register of deeds. Mr. Dewey declined, and Mr. Luke was nominated by acclamation.

The nomination for prosecuting attorney was passed, no lawyer being found in the ranks, and the committee was authorized to fill it, if thought best. Similar action was taken with the nominations for circuit court commissioners.

The chairman then said three coroners should next be nominated. Wm. Kedzie, city, Darwin H. Warren, of Dover, and E. A. Taylor, of Cambridge were named.

J. Wallace Page, of Rollin, was nominated for county surveyor.

Nominations for the state legislature were next made. First district—W. H. Moore, Palmyra; Second district—W. H. Benson, city; Third district—James Watkins, Clayton.

Albert Dewey, Cambridge, was nominated for congress in this congressional district, composed of four counties.

A county committee was ordered appointed by the chair.

A collection to defray expenses was then taken up. Mr. Damon stated the campaign would cost about $25.

The chair appointed the following county committee: W. H. Benson, Adrian; Walter Jones, Raisin; A. P. Kimball, Rome; D. Terwilliger, Clayton; Porter Beal, Rollin.

The best of feeling prevailed thro'out and the convention adjourned with the determination to prosecute a vigorous campaign. The Prohibitionists are now in the field and they have some excellent men to vote for too.

Brain Workers.

The complicated diseases arising from an overworked brain, or excessive nervous excitement, should not be neglected, lest they end in insanity and a premature grave. Heed such symptoms as nervous debility, blotches, skin diseases, dizziness, nervousness, dimness of sight, cough, indigestion, catarrh of the bladder, and general despondency. When thus afflicted, make haste to use Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens mind and body exhausted by disease and suffering; it is the truest of all life-giving tonics, and Nature's best assistant in restoring the proper functions to every organ affected. It will surely cure you, for it has cured thousands.

Strangers.

BY IDA EATON.

The friends who meet and pass some pleasant word
Are oftimes only strangers. All that's best
Lies beath the shoals of speech—is rarely stirred—
Muse beath the laughter and the oiben jest

Some commonplace will linger on the lips,
So distant from the thought we do not voice;
While all we've left unsaid finds its eclipse
In words of import small that seemed our choice.

Friends that are friends by sight and not by speech,
We meet, but give no sign that we have met;
Forgetting we are the face—long years that touch
Each day new truths that we do not forget.

We are the strangers—strangers at the best.
The sunlight smiles alike upon each face;
Somewhile, perchance, the much unsaid, unguessed,
Will in expression find a wondrous grace.

TIT FOR TAT;

OR

Curing a Flirting Lover.

"What are you thinking about, Jessie? You have not uttered a syllable for at least five minutes."

Jessie Miller looked at her lover with a very grave expression on her lovely face.

"Have I not? Do you really wish to know my thoughts?"

"Certainly I do."

"Well, then, do you not know that no woman is ever satisfied with a man's devotion if he appears to slight her in the presence of others?"

"What then?"

Jasper Sullivan's face slightly flushed as he asked the question: evidently he understood the connection real well.

"I think, my dear," said Jessie, "that I occupied the position of a slighted one last evening when you devoted yourself so openly to Kate Magee?"

Jasper's face flushed still more as he answered: "I only danced with her three times—"

"And sat out three more dances with her—" added Jessie quickly, "while I was obliged to play the part of a wall-flower. Do you think that was pleasant?"

"Really, Jessie, how plainly you talk."

"Why not? I was not jealous, but although I have the most perfect faith in you, it is not pleasant to see all the smiles devoted to a girl who delights in being a coquette."

"Jessie," said Jasper, "I am surprised that you dislike Miss Magee. In my opinion, she is a sweet girl, without an atom of coquetry about her."

"We will talk no more of Kate Magee, seeing how we differ; let us talk of ourselves.

"What am I to do to satisfy you?" asked Jasper, almost indignantly. "Would you tie me to your apron strings all the time?"

"Not one moment if you wish to be free," answered Jessie with pride. "You can leave me at once. I will not detain you."

"What nonsense, Jessie. You know I could not live without you. But I can't promise never to speak to another girl, especially a girl who comes from my own native town."

"Nor do I exact such a promise: only I wish you to see your conduct as others do: you know Burns' oft-quoted lines:

"O wad some power the gittie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us."

"I cannot see yet what you have to complain of," said Jasper.

"Would you now like me to be as friendly with some gentleman as you are with Miss Magee?" asked Jessie.

"I should not object," he answered, "I would never interfere with your enjoyment in any way."

"Well, Jasper, dear, I won't scold any more, but we'll make a bargain; you can flirt with Kate or any one else, giving me equal liberty; are you agreed?"

"On one condition: that neither of us abuse the privilege."

"Certainly."

And when this bargain was concluded the lovers separated. Jasper felt that Jessie was too exacting, while the lady considered her lover a dangerous flirt, likely to fall a victim to some girl's coquetry.

Jessie stood waiting for her lover, who was to escort her to a ball at the Lyceum Hall, and in her pink dress, with roses in her dark hair and a magnificent bouquet de corsage of the same beautiful flowers, looked pretty enough to tempt an anchorite.

Jasper, who really loved the girl, was loud in his admiration of her appearance.

Miss Magee was at the ball, and when Jasper Sullivan and Jessie entered, the pretty brunette tripped across the floor to bid them welcome.

"Oh, Jessie," she cried, when her first greetings were over, "who do you think is here?"

"I am sure I cannot imagine," answered Jessie.

"Why, Mr. Mountfair, your old admirer."

"I thought he was in Europe," said Jessie.

"So he has been. He tells me that he came back in the White Star steamer Celtic, and only arrived in New York yesterday."

"Ah! there he is," cried Jessie, "and how handsome he looks."

"You have a strange idea of beauty," snarled Jasper.

"We can't expect you to see as we do, can we dear?" replied Kate Magee. "He has put his name down for three dances," and the little Irish brunette flourished her programme triumphantly.

"Is there any room for my name there?" asked Jasper.

"I believe I have one or two dances left," she answered, with the coolest indifference.

Jasper took the card and filled in his own name in all the blank spaces.

"You had better take what dances you want before my card is filled," remarked Jessie to her lover.

"After the first dance I will attend."

"Indeed," thought Jessie, "he shall find that I'm not always going to be a wall-flower."

Ten minutes later, Jasper, mercilessly snubbed by Kate Magee, disconsolately sought his betrothed, his smarting vanity needing the balm of her devotion. He found her talking gaily with Mr. Mountfair, who made no attempt to conceal his appreciation of her society.

With easy grace Jessie introduced the two gentlemen, who bowed stiffly to each other.

For a moment he forgot all about Kate, for he was jealous.

For the first time he saw Jessie entirely engrossed with another man, that man a former suitor and a millionaire, and the experience was not a joyous one.

By and by he turned to Jessie.

"Will you give me your card?" he asked, as she looked round.

"Certainly, but I'm afraid all the dances are gone," she smilingly answered.

He looked at the programme without a word, as she had said, the card was full.

That was the most miserable evening Jasper Sullivan ever spent.

Jessie, in the highest of spirits, was so completely absorbed by Mr. Mountfair that he had no opportunity to exchange half a dozen words with her.

Kate Magee was annoyed, for she had determined to secure the millionaire, but he treated her with the greatest indifference.

She determined, however, on one grand effort, and late in the evening proceeded to make it.

Mr. Mountfair and Jessie were still laughing and talking together in one corner of the ball-room.

Near by stood Jasper Sullivan, his face dark with anger.

Kate came up to him, her face all smiles.

"Oh, Mr. Sullivan!" she cried: "I am in such a fix. My cousin has gone home without me, and I have no escort; and it is so late—"

She paused and looked appealingly—not at Jasper, but at Mr. Mountfair, fully expecting that he would offer to do escort duty. But he seemed blind and deaf to all but his companion, and Jasper was forced to respond.

"I shall be glad to see you home, Miss Magee, if Jessie will wait here till I return," he said slowly and reluctantly.

Instantly Mr. Mountfair seemed to regain possession of his senses.

"Allow me to relieve you of the care of Miss Miller," he courteously said, as he turned to Jasper; "I will be delighted to take her home."

Before the angry Celt could reply to the New York millionaire Jessie interposed:

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Mountfair, that will settle matters nicely," she said, her face being illumined by a bright smile.

What could Mr. Sullivan say? His face grew darker than before, as he stammered out something about "being pleased to oblige all parties so."

It is certain Kate Magee never had such a miserable escort as her countryman proved to be that night.

An hour later Jessie was standing on the steps of her residence, bidding Mr. Mountfair good-night.

"I may call and take you for a drive?" he said on parting.

"Yes, I shall be delighted to go," was Jessie Miller's answer.

"Jessie, one word—" a voice arrested her just as she was going into the house.

A gleam of amusement crossed the girl's arch face as she turned to confront her Celtic lover.

"Why, Jasper, dear, is that you?" asked Jessie, in innocent surprise. "Where is Kate Magee?"

"Confound the girl," he exclaimed, "if it had not been for that coquette—but never mind. Are you going to ride with that conceited fellow to-morrow?"

"Certainly I am," she replied coolly. "Why not?"

"Because I forbid it."

"My dear Jasper. At present you have no right to command——"

"But Jessie——"

"I think," added Jessie, "that you have forgotten the little agreement we made. If you remember——"

"I remember nothing except that I have been an arrant fool," he exclaimed, seizing her hand and holding it in a tight grasp. "My dearest, I have suffered so much to-night, that I understand how unfairly I have hitherto treated you whenever I have flirted——"

"My dear Jasper. I am surprised to see how you dislike your countrywoman, Kate Magee. In my opinion she is such a love of a girl——"

"Jessie, show me some mercy," cried Jasper. "Forgive me!"

"I do forgive you," answered Jessie. "But you must let me accept Mr. Mountfair's invitation for to-morrow."

"No, no, no! I cannot allow that——"

"Not when I tell you that Vincent Mountfair is my sister's husband, and has been for two years. Why, you are jealous."

"Oh, Jessie, can you forgive me?"

"Yes, of course I can. I have only given you a little lesson that you needed."

A kiss prevented the pretty Jessie from saying anything more about her stratagem.

Jasper Sullivan went home that night radiantly happy.

The lesson had cured him, and he has since proved not only an honest lover, but a most devoted husband.—New York Mercury.

Why the Faro Bank Wins.

That is something that a great many clever men who play a great deal against faro do not know. It is not that there is a steady percentage in the bank's favor in the cases of "splits," but that the bank plays with the most money, that the bank always wins in the end. That is a simple enough proposition, but is seldom understood. A bank with $25,000 cash has as many more chances of winning in the end the money of a player worth $100 as the bank's capital is greater than the player's. The player can only lose his $100 once; the bank can lose two hundred and fifty times before it has reduced its chances to the player's. In other words, the chances in favor of the bank, as quoted, in addition to the percentage on "splits," is two hundred and fifty to one. This is susceptible of absolute mathematical demonstration, yet will be read with amazement by many who occasionally buck the tiger. The ordinary player who goes with ten or twenty dollars to lose in a bank having $100,000 to lose, can do a little Sunday morning work in figuring out his chances of beating the bank.

Canned Seamanship.

While I sat talking with the fisherman, whom a four ounce eel had made extremely voluble, my attention was attracted to a terrible splashing under a tree a short distance down stream.

"Pull it towards ye, can't ye? Pull, ye imitation of a plaster Paris gondolier! Pull towards ye, I tell ye!"

And a small skiff with a leg of mutton sail swung out from under the tree and bumped along the bank. Seated amidship was a middle-aged gentleman with a plug hat set on the back of his perspiring head, pulling hard on the main sheet, while a lady in the stern sheet had braced her foot against the combing, and was doing her best to pull the tiller out of the rudder head.

"Don't ye know which is toward ye? Want to wreck this ship on an inhospitable coast, and be eaten up by a lot of heathen, half full of gin and half full of Bible? Toward ye! Pull it towards ye, before this ark is dashed to a million splinters!"

By this time it was hard aground, a fact that neither the lady nor the gentleman appeared to be aware of.

"I can't pull it any further, Mr. Spoopendyke!" moaned the lady. "It seems to be tied here somewhere, and won't come."

"Luff her, then! Luff her, I tell ye!" roared Mr. Spoopendyke, half buried in the flapping sail, and struggling to retain his hat. "Luff her, I tell ye!"

"That's all very nice," muttered Mrs. Spoopendyke, flopping down on a seat, "but I'm a heap more apt to hate her, Say, dear, ain't we doing pretty well now?"

Mr. Spoopendyke fought his way into fresh air and glared around him.

"Want to sink us?" he yelled, slamming the little boom from side to side in the hope of catching some wind in the sail. "Want to run down in six thousand fathoms of water? Hard down, I tell ye! Put her hard down!"

"I guess she's about as hard as she'll go," fluttered Mrs. Spoopendyke, looking over the stern and seeing that it was high and dry. "It's the other end that isn't hard down, dear, and I guess you'll have to turn it around sideways."

"That's what we want to do!" fairly shrieked Mr. Spoopendyke, clasping his arm around the mast and bringing his head against it in a fury of desperation. "It took you to get the idea! Holy frog, if I only had time to fit you out with a President's flag and an appropriation what a navy you'd make!" and Mr. Spoopendyke again dashed his head against the mast. "You hit it!" he yelled. "That's the scheme! All you want now is a foreign flag and a political Custom House to be the whole American merchant marine!" and Mr. Spoopendyke dashed aft, seized the tiller and jerked away at it with one hand, while with the other he hauled away at the main sheet in a vain hope that he might get some headway from some direction.

"What are you trying to do, dear?" timidly asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, dodging the flying boom.

"Do," yawped Mr. Spoopendyke, growing madder. "I am trying to reconcile this sail to the idea that a traveling idiot asylum in white skirts and a red shawl isn't dangerous! What d'ye s'pose I'm trying to do? Think I'm hauling my arms out of the sockets to amuse the children? Think I'm flopping this sail around to keep it from getting sunburned? Well, I ain't!" he howled, seeing that the tide was drifting his bow around and setting him in shore broadside on. "And I ain't wiggling this business to keep the moths out! I'm sailing, I am! Here's where you get your canned seamanship! Hear me?" and Mr. Spoopendyke rammed around in the boat, now kicking the tiller and then the boom. "See how proudly we cut the waves?" and just then the rudder came out of the stern post and hung in his hands. "Notice how we dance across the measly billows?" and Mr. Spoopendyke plunged head foremost into the canvas like a sail needle, and sank helplessly into the bottom of the boat.

"How nicely we are going!" echoed Mrs. Spoopendyke, who could afford to flatter, seeing that she was safe in the mud. "Upon my word, it is quite like a ferry boat."

"More desiccated marine information!" squealed Mr. Spoopendyke, angling for himself around in the bottom of the boat and wondering who had nailed a church across his back. "That's your notion of sailing! I s'pose you've got some kind of a dog house idea that this packet goes by steam! Well, it don't, I tell ye!" and his voice arose as he found that it was athwart and not a church. "It goes by wind, when the wind knows enough to blow! Hear that? Ferry boat! Oh, ferry boat!" At this point his voice sank into the bitterest sarcasm. "You've got it down fine! You see through this business! All you want is a fog horn and a State Central Committee indorsement to be a Secretary of the Navy! If I had your intelligence on maritime affairs, I'd buy a cocked hat, apply for a pension and advertise myself as an admiral in search of a respectable job and offer the best city references! How are we going to get ashore?"

"We are ashore, dear," replied Mrs. Spoopendyke.

Mr. Spoopendyke ducked under the sail, which had all along prevented him from seeing the situation, and discovered for the first time that his boat was well up on the land.

"Dod gast the shore!" he yelled. "Why didn't you tell me there had been a land slide? Why didn't you let me know that the channel had shifted? Why——"

"But we've been here all the time!" remonstrated Mrs. Spoopendyke.

Mr. Spoopendyke looked at her helplessly for a moment. Then he stepped ashore, and hauled his wife after him. The next instant he sent the boat into the stream with a vigorous kick, and jamming his hands into his pockets led the way to the railroad bridge without a word.

"I don't care," panted Mrs. Spoopendyke, struggling along after him. "We had a real pleasant sail, and the only time the thing didn't go sideways was when it was stuck in the mud!"

"That's the worst of them skiffs!" muttered the fisherman, who had watched the sailing exploit with profound interest. "They ain't got any keel nor center board, and a man may sit all day on a lee shore and think he's makin' ninety knots an hour, till the wind changes, jibes his sail and shows him to himself half way up a tree!"—Brooklyn Eagle.

Eat Your Breakfast First.

Dr. Hall is authority for the following thoughts upon breakfasting before much exercise in the open air, particularly in districts where fever and ague are abundant: Breakfast should be eaten in the morning before leaving the house for exercise or labor of any description; those who do it will be able to perform more work and with greater alacrity than those who work an hour or two before breakfast. Beside this, the average duration of life of those who take breakfast before exercise or work will be a number of years greater than those who do otherwise. Most persons begin to feel weak after having been engaged five or six hours in their ordinary avocations; a good meal revigorates; but from the last meal of the day until the next morning there is an interval of some twelve hours; hence the body in a sense is weak, and in proportion cannot resist deleterious agencies, whether of the fierce cold of mid-winter or of the poisonous miasm which rests upon the surface of the earth wherever the sun shines, on a blade of vegetation or a heap of offal. The miasm is more solid, more concentrated, and hence more malignant, about sunrise and sunset than any other hour of the twenty-four, because the cold of the night condenses it, and it is on the first few inches above the soil in its most solid form; but as the sun rises, it warms and expands and ascends to a point high enough to be breathed, and being taken into the lungs and swallowed with the saliva into the stomach, all weak and empty as it is, it is greedily drunk in, thrown immediately into the circulation of the blood, and carried to every part of the body, depositing its poisonous influence at the very fountain head of life. If early breakfast were taken in regions where chills and fever and ague prevail, and if, in addition, a brisk fire were kindled in the family room for an hour, including sunrise and sunset, these troublesome maladies would diminish in any one year, not ten fold, but a thousand fold, because the heat of the fire would rarefy the miasmatic air instantly and send it above the breathing point. But it is "troublesome" to be building fires night and morning all summer; it being no "trouble," requiring no effort, to shiver and shake by the hour, weeks and months together.

Flowers and Insects.

All admire the colors and forms of flowers, but these are only part of their endless attractions. Close observers have found out many curious things which hasty lookers never see. That close questioner of nature, Charles Darwin, found that insects were attracted to flowers by their colors, and that different insects choose different colors.—He cut the showy petals off some of the flowers in clumps in the garden, and found that bees never went near those, though very busy with the others. Sir John Lubbock put honey in glass over colored papers, and found that bees readily discriminated and always went to the blue, as they do in the flowers. Muller noticed that each kind of butterfly visited only its own favorite color of Lantana. Grant Allen shows that as nearly all colored flowers depend upon insects to brush the pollen on the stigma and to cause them to produce seed, that their preference for the intensest color of their choice tends to the production of the most from them, and so to the fuller development of color. He shows too, that at first, the only color was yellow, as seen in the seed parts of nearly all flowers still, and that white, pink, red, purple and blue were developed in succession. Many flowers still open with a yellow or pink tinge, and gradually change through this series to some shade of red, or finally, blue. Blue and purple are most common in complicate corollas which only bees and butterflies penetrate easily; moths only see white flowers.—Vick's Floral Guide.

The White House Artist.

Le Clare, the artist who painted Gen. Grant, is to have sittings from the president soon. I don't know whether he painted the picture of the Grant family all in one frame, that hangs in one of the lower rooms of the white house, or not, but if he did, he ought either to be broiled on a gridiron over a slow fire, or else a pension of $50,000 a year should be given him with the thanks of congress. There never was, outside of Punch and Puck, another such a funny picture as that of the Grant family, and the joke is that it is so exactly like the Grants. First stands the general, looking like he always does; then Mrs. Grant, in a gorgeous red velvet robe with a tail to it like a comet, looking like the queen of Sheba. Then there are all the olive branches grouped around—it's perfectly killing. The Vicar of Wakefield flies into the mind—the seven Flamborough's painted together, each with an orange in the hand and as many sheep as the painter would put on for nothing.—Washington Letter.

An Army of Goggled Soldiers.

Arabi Bey hopes to hold his position in the Nile delta until the great river rises and floods the country. He will cut the canals to help the Nile in its annual overflow. This is a serious menace to Gen. Sir Garnet Wolseley. But Arabi is threatened with a scare-crow enemy. The Egyptian siroccos blow the fine sands from the deserts on either side of the Nile with hurricane fury. At times the air is full of it. Sir Ralph Abercrombie found that nearly his whole army was afflicted with ophthalmia from sand-storms. London papers suggest that the British soldiers of Sir. Garnet's army shall wear Swiss goggles. Rather bad for ascertaining range, which would be a blessing to Arabi's best soldiers. But what about Arabi's fellaheens? The frightful spectacle of an army of goggled soldiers at close quarters must cause a panic among the ignorant Egyptians. Fancy Wolseley and General Alison in goggles, and "grim-visaged war" is turned from a tragedy into a farce.

Plain Preaching.

Friar Cuthbert was one of the class of jocular preachers so popular in the mediæval times. They preached what was called Risus Paschales—comic homilies for Easter. Their works have been printed, and the student of early manners may consult them with advantage, though he may be repelled by their coarseness. They were bold satirists, dwelling perhaps too exclusively on the baser aspect of human life. In their denunciation of prevailing vices they did not spare the most exalted personages. Maillard, the cordelier, so irritated Louis XII. by his strictures that he threatened to have him thrown into the Seine. "The King may do as he pleases," replied the undaunted preacher, "but tell him that I shall sooner get to Paradise by water than he will arrive by all his post horses."

But we shall best give the reader an idea of the style adopted by these jocular clergy by quoting a few sentences from a sermon preached by Father Onoroto, the Capuchin, which we have come across in a curious old Italian work. In the course of the sermon he brought into the pulpit a skull, which he addressed as follows: "Speak," he said, "speak, and tell me whether you were not once the head of a magistrate! You don't answer? Silence shows consent." He then placed upon the head a judge's cap, exclaiming at the same time, "Have you not often been in league with the advocate in order to deprive the widow and the fatherless of their rights? You don't answer. Silence shows consent." He then laid down the skull and took up another, to which he exclaimed, "Were you not the head of one of those light-minded damsels whose every thought is given to their coquetries?" Then taking a cuff from his sleeve, he placed it upon the hideous relic of humanity, crying: "Miserable head, where are now the soft, languid glances that used to captivate the unwary? Where is that beautiful mouth which formed such fascinating smiles! Where are now the pearly teeth—where the rouge—where the cosmetics with which the face was so often painted? And so on in this strain the capuchin continued, describing all the various conditions of life, and altering the position of the skull, which he held in his hand, according to the subject with which he had to deal. On one occasion Louis XIV. asked Bourdaloue, the famous orator of Notre Dame, his opinion of Onoroto: "Sire," was the reply, "that preacher tickles indeed the ear, but also pricks the heart. People return at his sermons the purses they steal at mine."—People's Friend.

What Becomes of Our Bodies.

With a very near approach to truth, the human family inhabiting the earth has been estimated at 7,000,000,000; the annual loss by death is 8,000,000. Now, the weight of the animal matter of this immense body cast into the grave is no less than 634,000 tons, and by its decomposition produces 9,000,000,000,000 cubic feet of gaseous matter. The vegetable productions of the earth clear away from the atmosphere the gases thus generated, decomposing and assimilating them for their own increase. This cycle of changes has been going on ever since man became an occupier of the earth. He feeds on the lower animals and on the seeds of plants, which in due time become a part of himself.

The lower animals feed upon the herbs and grasses, which, in their turn become the animal, then, by its death, again pass into the atmosphere and are ready once more to be assimilated by plants, the earthy or bony substance alone remaining where it is deposited, and not even there unless sufficiently deep in the soil to be out of the absorbent reach of the roots of plants and trees. It is not at all difficult to prove that the elements of which the living bodies of the present generation are composed have passed through millions of mutations, and formed parts of all kinds of animal and vegetable bodies, and consequently it may be said that fractions of the elements of our ancestors form portions of ourselves.

A Jealous Actress.

Bernhardt is terribly jealous of her new husband, whom marriage has not entirely cured of a passion for flirting. She keeps a close eye upon his movements, and is never comfortable when he is out of her sight. During her stage performances, the bare thought that her attractive lord and master is engaged in "mashing" some of the foot-light beauties behind the wings drives her nearly distracted. At Blackpool recently, where an immense audience had assembled to see her in "Camille," she refused after the first act to play any longer. She alleged sickness as the reason for this sudden whim, and pointed to the blood which she was raising from her lungs with a violent attack of coughing as a proof of it. It was shrewdly surmised, however, that the blood was merely "stage blood," which Sarah had used with realistic effects, and it was afterwards discovered that her jealousy was the real reason of her refusal to continue the play. She had detected Damala in a new flirtation, and could not remain on the stage while he was out of her sight. If she doesn't shoot or poison this fickle benedict before long, or kill off herself or every beauty whom he is likely to admire, she will not be true to the traditions of the disappointed actress of the French stage.

A Basis for Breakfast.

Lamb chops are excellent cooked in this way: Put them in a frying pan, with a very little water, so little that it will boil away by the time the meat is tender; then put in lumps of butter with the meat and let it brown slowly; there will be a brown, crisp surface, with a fine flavor. Serve for breakfast with potatoes cooked thus: Choose small ones and let them boil until they are tender; drain off the water and pour over them, while still in the kettle, at least one teacupful of cream; mash them smooth in this.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Spain is looming up as a lively country. The furious agitation against the commercial treaty with France some time ago is now followed by a refusal to pay taxes. A wild insurrection will be the next thing in order to convince the world that Suain is not dead.

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, Jealousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. Jealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

WIT AND HUMOR.

That is a very happy and ingenious suggestion which an exchange makes for the benefit of somnambulists—wear roller skates to bed.

A Baltimore belle has married a policeman. His beat was in front of her house for over a year, and she noticed that he never snored.

An innocent Omaha girl who saw an organ grinder's monkey for the first time, exclaimed, "Is that thing one of them are æsthetes that we read about?"

"No, sir," said a laborer, "I don't hire out to that farmer. His confounded fences are all barbed wire, and I can't get a minute's rest climbing over."

"Don't think dat because a man's got a serious face dar ain't no fun in him," said Uncle Mose. "De monkey is allers a grinnin', but he don't get off near such good jokes as de elephant does."

Health journals insist upon reposing on the right side only, and claim that it is injurious to lie on both sides, but we dont know where they will find a healthier looking set of men than lawyers.

A girl from Cincinnati kept on growing fat and fatah, though she dieted on battah for a yeah. In vain she tried to scattah all the adiposal mattah, till the doctor said she'd bettah stop her beah.

A stranger called at forty-eight different houses in Cleveland and asked: "Is the boss home?" There was no man home in any one instance, and yet forty-seven of the women replied, "Yes, sir; what do you want?"

An effort is to be made to raise oysters in Salt Lake, Utah. It seems as though it might be done, if they go at it right. Oysters have been raised from boarding house soup, but eternal vigilance is the price of oysters it should be understood.

He came home the other night in a drizzling rain; soaked inside as well as out. "What excuse have you to offer," said his better half, "for coming home in such a beery condition?" "None, my dear," was his answer "'cept 'twas a very muggy day."

A correspondent asks, "What time of year do the days begin to shorten?" When you have a note in bank. A note in bank is a great annihilator of time. The days are crowded together in thin layers, and the nights are like a smear from a blacking brush.—Arkansas Traveler.

Little Una McM., who had been sitting with knitted brows for several minutes, as if pondering some weighty problem of life, suddenly exclaimed, "Aunt C., I've been trying to think what business to go into when I'm grown up, and I've just decided. I mean to be a hypocrite."

"What would you do if you were I and I were you?" tenderly inquired a young swell of his lady friend, as he escorted her home from church. "Well," said she, "if I were you I would throw away that vile cigarette, cut up my cane for fire wood, wear my watch chain underneath my coat, and stay at home at nights and pray for brains."

A gentleman in Troy has received a circular from a lady principal of a boarding school in Louisville, Ky., which includes a letter from a grateful "patron" who writes: "I will not apologize for writing you, who have been a factor in the mental development of my daughter. I feel gatified for this efflorescence and there is no one who has stimulated her more than yourself. By your magnetism or subtle charm, with which you have invested your instructions, the road has been a royal one for her."

In New York recently twenty-five young men were given instructions on practical and scientific plumbing. The practical part, it is presumed, consisted in tearing up $50 worth of flooring to repair a 40 cent leak which was located in another place, while the scientific portion comprised the art of making out a bill.

The obliging visitor, to show that he is really fond of children, and that the dear little one is not annoying him in the least, treats the kid to a ride upon his knee. "Trot! trot! trot! How do you like that, my boy? Is that nice?" "Yes, sir, replies the child; "but not so nice as on the real donkey, the one with four legs."

They had been engaged to be married fifteen years, and still he had not mustered up courage enough to ask her to name the happy day. One evening he called in a particularly spoony frame of mind, and asked her to sing something that would "move" him. She sat down at the piano and sang, "Darling I am growing old."

"No," remarked the red-nosed man, "I don't believe in this bathing; people bathe too much, altogether too much. Look at me. I keep out of the water." They did look at him, and immediately came to the unanimous conclusion that he not only kept himself out of the water, but that he also kept water out of himself.

"Well," said a Yankee proudly to a traveling Scot, as they stood by the Falls of Niagara, "is not that wonderful? In your country you never saw anything like that!" "Like that?" quoth the latter; "there's a far more wonderful concern nae twa miles frae whar I was born." "Indeed," says Jonathan; "and pray what kind of a concern may it be?" "Why, mon," replied the other, "it's a peacock wi' a wooden leg!"

"What have you that's good?" says a hungry traveler, as he seated himself at table d'hote at a Salt Lake City hotel. "O," said the waiter, "we've roast beef, roast mutton, roast pork, and broiled curlews." "What's a curlew?" said the traveler. "Why, a bird—something like a snipe." "Could it fly." "Yes," "Did it have wings?" "Yes." "Then I don't want any curlew. Anything that had wings and could fly, and didn't leave this country, I don't want for my dinner."

The Morality Bard.

"I want to get a position for my wife on your paper if I could," said a meek man with a slight tinge of reproach, as he came into the Boomerang office yesterday and sat down on the desk with his coat-tails in the cold, calm depths of the paste fountain.

"She is really one of the literati, although people who has known her only by her washin' and ironin' don't suspect it. I, however, know her great mental scope. I've been married to her twenty-one years next frost, and I've been thrown more or less in contact with her. My soul and hern has communed together time and again, and we have discussed questions of considerable depth off and on.

"She writes a good legible hand and is quick in figures. Whether you want some one to make out bills for pay locals, or write a eulogy on a paid up subscriber, she's your huckleberry. She is a perfect lady, and you might have her on your corps for years and the forked tongue of scandal would never touch you. She's plain, of course, in feature, and has an impediment in one limb, it being shorter than the other by four inches. This gives her an eccentric movement when she walks, like a self-rake reaper; but Lord, you'd never notice that after you come to know and love her.

"She can trill a stanza of poetry occasionally, too, if you give her time to think of a few hard words. She has wrote some as fine things as I have ever saw in the English language. She is, better, however, on death than anything else. She loves to turn loose and mourn in easy rhyme at so much per stanza and found.

"She wrote a short poem on the death of a young man in our neighborhood, who was drowned while in a swimming in the Stinking Water Creek. It run something like this:

"O, treacherous, treacherous tide,
Young William for to drownd—
To madly yank him off his base
And whirl him round and round.

"We found him in the twilight hour,
Freed from his earthly woes;
His calm face upward turning,
And sikall up his nose.

"His person was sunk in the shifting sand,
His mouth was open wide,
The Pollywogs nestled in his ears,
Beneath the fragrant tide.

"His open-back shirt lay on the shore,
And the balance of his trousseau,
While his soul went scooting up the flume,
Out through the ether blue.

"'Twas down around the coyote Point
We found him when evening fell,
And we planted him under the cactus vines,
In the shaft of the Mountain Bell.

"Good-bye, William, far away
On the edge of a large damp cloud
Though you're among the angel gang,
You needn't feel so doggon proud.

"I will also leave with you a few sonnets which are the work of her pen. You can look them over and let me know in a day or two what salary you feel like paying a woman of her strength of intellect and grip of genius. Till then adieu. I will call again Friday and complete the trade." Without another word he was gone, and he has not been seen since. Later on, however, when we want to double up the subscription of the paper, we will publish another one of these poems. With our present facilities we do not dare to do it.—Laramie Boomerang.

How She Saved Her Darling.

THE Marshall Statesman of last week says: Several of the engineers who are working from Beadle lake towards Marshall were in the city Tuesday evening for supplies, and report the work of making the preliminary survey progressing nicely. Other parties of surveyors are being added to the present force, and it is quite probable that the preliminary work will be finished in a few days.

Doubting ones, please write Mrs. Clarke, and be convinced. Sold by C. A. Wright & Co.

It seems pretty evident that John K. Boies has been plowing with the Democratic heifer over in the third representative district of this county.

Some astronomers claim that the comet has split, and others deny it.—In either case, however, it furnishes business for the star-gazers, and items for the newspapers in a dry time.

The New York Anti-Monopoly League has decided to support the Democratic state ticket, which will bring several thousand votes to that ticket. And still the tide keeps rising.

An address to the Republicans of New York has been issued by one thousand Republican voters of the city of Buffalo giving their reasons for repudiating Folger and supporting Cleveland for Governor.

Alex. H. Stephens has been elected governor of Georgia by a majority of 60,000 and his opponent Gartrill proposes to contest. All right. That is about all the fun the opposition to the Democracy have down in Georgia.

The election returns from Ohio resemble an avalanche. The Democrats have swept the state by a majority of twenty-five thousand, and elected fifteen out of twenty-one congressmen. The Republicans carried the state by twenty-four thousand at the last election and the present congressional delegation stands fifteen Republicans to five Democrats.

The Democratic and Greenback representative convention met at Clayton on the same day and nominated two candidates. One good candidate on a union ticket would stand a reasonable show of election in that district. With two candidates in the field both are certain of defeat. For downright stupidity commend us to the average Democratic convention.

It is understood the Democrats in the eleventh district will put no candidate in the field against Mr. Breitung, the Republican pominee. A wise decision. All reports go to show that Mr. Breitung is a superior man for that place. He was nominated as a protest against Hubbellism. Let the Democrats of that district emphasize the protest by making his election unanimous.

The alacrity with which the people are rallying to the support of Grover Cleveland in New York is significant. Judge Folger represents the Republican machine. Grover Cleveland represents the smashing of the Democratic machine. And in this fact principally may be found the secret of Cleveland's popularity. In commenting on this fact the Galveston News pertinently says:

Beyond question, if the democracy are to have for their Presidential candidate in 1884 a man who has the stuff and the grit in him, and the hold upon the esteem and confidence of the people, to enable him to triumph over the machinations of the republican machine, he must stand forth not as the mere creature of another conscienceless party machine but as a living, unequivocal response to the inspiration of the people.

Under the provisions of law enacted at the last session of the legislature an entire new registry list must be made this fall. It matters not whether an elector has resided in town three months or thirty years his name must be registered on a new list. And every man must make a personal application to the Board of Registration on the Saturday before election or to the clerk before that day to insure the placing of his name on the list. His name cannot be sent to the officials by a messenger. The act provides that at the session of the several boards of registrations next preceding the general election to be held in this state in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, and at said session next preceding the general election every ten years thereafter, there shall be had and made an entire new registration of the qualified electors of each organized township and city of this State, excepting in the county of Wayne and except in those cities where provision is made by existing law for a new registration oftener than every ten years."

THE SITUATION IN NEW YORK.

Discouraged and Anxious.

Troy Times, Rep.: There is no disguising the fact that the past week has been one of great discouragement and anxiety to the Republican party of this State.

Mr. Curtis' Value.

Albany Argus, Dem.: We presume that Mr. George William Curtis' value is as great when he speaks against the machine as when he was supposed to have spoken for it.

Consolation after Vengeance.

Ithaca Journal, Rep.: While the defeat of Judge Folger would be a misfortune to the Republicans, the defeat of the machine would compensate them in large measure for the humiliation of a Democratic victory.

A Wise Suggestion.

New York Sun, Ind.: The Republicans of this State are hard up for campaign speakers, and propose to import them from other States. Why not put Secor Robeson of New Jersey in the field? He is the leader of the Republican party in Congress.

The Road to Future Success.

Providence (R. I.) Press, Rep.: The possible defeat of the Republican party in New York this fall is only one way to the supremacy of purified Republicanism in future years. There is little danger of permanent Democratic supremacy. The same is true of Pennsylvania. The Republican party, rid of its bosses, is the people's party.

Swallow It Whole.

New York Herald, Ind.: It is a pity that Mr. Folger's letter of acceptance carries with it so many unpleasant reminders of his party's failure to do the duties which its platforms promise shall be done. We advise Republican candidates hereafter to avoid Mr. Folger's error; let them swallow the platform whole, without taking it to pieces as he has done.

Honest Testimony from an Adversary.

Syracuse Standard, Rep.: There was nothing in Mayor Cleveland's veto of the Decoration Day appropriation that was not to his credit, and which was not compelled both by law and the fact that he was elected as a reform mayor. The Republican papers which have been cackling over that veto have simply assisted Mr. Cleveland. He seems to be an exceptionally good mayor.

A Race for Defeat.

Philadelphia Times, Ind.: There is a race between President Arthur and Senator Cameron just now to ascertain which can overwhelmingly and hopelessly defeat his party in his State by the smallest majority. Their methods are the same; their tickets have been fashioned much the same way, except that the Arthur machine added forgery to Cameron's purchase by Federal patronage and despotic control in forcing nominations. Both selected men who are personally worthy and creditable as gubernatorial candidates, and both will be defeated, not because of their own individual demerits, but because of the odious cause of the masters who created them as gubernatorial nominees.

A Timely Warning.

Chicago Journal: Looking at the condition of affairs in those two great States, and observing the unrest that is everywhere visible among the masses, it is only the part of prudence for the leaders of the Republican party to be admonished in season of the danger ahead. The men who compose this "grand old party" are for the most part intelligent, self-reliant and independent men, and all they ask is that there shall be fair play and even-handed justice in conducting public affairs. They hate boss rule and will not submit to it. They are willing to bow to the will of the majority, but not to the edict of the one man "machine." Let the Republicans of other States take timely warning from the bad example of Pennsylvania and New York.

The Peril of the Democratic Ticket.

Albany Times, Dem.: The election of Cleveland means a fair trial of the Railroad Commission bill and the approval of all legislation that is in the interests of the people as against the corporations. Folger, nominated by the corporations, must necessarily feel bound to them, and they will elect him if they can. There is no question that the Stalwarts are relying upon this with great assurance of success. It is to be noticed that at their consultation the other day there was quite a unanimous expression of opinion that Folger, in the cities, would receive a large Democratic vote. What does that mean? Is there any dissatisfaction with the Democratic ticket among Democrats? We have yet to hear of the first instance. Is there any Democrat who goes about saying that he shall vote for Folger? We have yet to hear of one. On what, then, do these predictions of a Democratic vote for Folger rest? Solely upon the undeniable fact that there is a percentage of Democrats, as there is of Republicans, whose votes can be bought. These votes are counted on in advance. They will bring a good price this year; every vote that can be got for money will find a buyer, and this vote is to be thrown solid for Folger. This mercenary vote must be overcome with unbought ballots, and it behooves us to fully comprehend the situation.

A PROFESSIONAL CONFESSION.

The Unusual Experience of a Prominent Man Made Public.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith re-published entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting.

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

Sir:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive influences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that today thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city, surrounded by my friends and waiting for my death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds, and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body, and do not understand it. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought it was nothing; that probably I had taken a cold, which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times neuralgic, pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However, my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon me. Candidly, I thought I was suffering from malaria, and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled in the bottom. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible future for all physical neglect, and impending danger always brings a person to his senses, even though it may then be too late. I realized, at last, my critical condition, and aroused myself to overcome it. And, oh! how hard I tried! I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the prominent mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, nervous prostration; another, malaria; another dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on, through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of all of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during all of which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders—the little twigs of pain had grown to oaks of agony. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a torture to myself and friends. I could retain no food upon my stomach and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell upon the floor, convulsively clutched the carpet and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My urine was filled with tube casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys in its last stages.

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation he mentioned a remedy of which I had heard much, but had never used. Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures which had come under his observation, by means of this remedy, and urged me to try it. As practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I cherished the prejudice both natural and common with all regular practitioners, and derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice and try the remedy he so highly recommended. I began its use on the first day of June, and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for me in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed, and I was able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better, as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased, and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover, I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity. I also determined that I would give a course of lectures in the Corinthian Academy of Music in this city, stating in full the symptoms and almost hopelessness of my disease, and the remarkable means by which I have been saved. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, become entirely free from pain, and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe that more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's disease has no distinctive symptoms of its own, indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity, but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Few physicians and fewer people realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest systems, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of Kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known as I am throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession, and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I am prepared to produce, and truths which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

Gives Entire Satisfaction.

As evidence that Ford's Tonic Cordial is just as efficacious now as it was forty years ago, read the following letter:

Americus Bell, of Matawan, N. J., Sept. 19, 1881, says: "It affords me pleasure to recommend Dr. Foord's Tonic Cordial. I have used it with greater satisfaction than any like preparation I have ever tried."

E. T. Goodall, East New York, L. I., April 5, 1882, says: "I regard Dr. Foord's Tonic Cordial by far the most efficacious remedy for diarrhea and cholera. It has acted on me as no other remedy ever has, and I would not be without a bottle in the house under any circumstances."

W. J. Latha, of University Station, N. C., says: "I have used Edey's Carbolic Troches for sore throat with the most satisfactory results."

Change of Mind.

I declined to insert your advertisement of Hop Bitters last year, because I then thought they might not be promotive of the cause of temperance, but find they are, and a very valuable medicine, myself and wife having been greatly benefited by them, and I take great pleasure in making them known.

THE temperance meetings at the opera house this week have been well attended thus far and a good degree of interest manifested. Mr. Woodford is an accomplished and eloquent speaker and has made hosts of friends in Tecumseh during his short stay here. The meetings will be continued during the week.

Weakness of the joints and muscles, impurity of the blood, urinary catarrh and other disordered organic functions permanently cured by using Brown's Iron Bitters. It strengthens the affected parts, infuses new life, new health and new vigor into the whole general system, and makes life seem well worth living.

JUST at this time the repetition of a few points on the game laws of the State may not be devoid of interest: Squirrels may be killed from September 1 to January 1; woodcock, from July 1 to January 1; plover, from July 15 to January 1; partridges, from October 15 to January 1; railbirds, from September 1 to December 1; wild turkeys, from October 15 to January 1; wild fowl, from September 1 to May 16; deer, from October 2 to December 1.

Adrian Record: The Tecumseh HERALD intimates that the Record is "off" on its statement that Mr. Wooden, democratic candidate for coroner, is a Quaker. It says: "Father Wooden has been a Universalist preacher for the past forty years." We stand corrected. Universalist preacher, eh? Better yet. He could not only hold an inquest but preach a funeral sermon afterward. And he wouldn't send a man to the "iron-works" either. We support Wooden for coroner.

MATRIMONIAL.

Yesterday, at the hospitable residence of the bride's parents in Raisin, Miss Jennie Beevers became Mrs. Thos. R. Kyle. Our popular young blacksmith has finally decided that his business will support a family, and he has acted the part of a wise man in selecting a good girl in good season, instead of fooling away eight or ten years in bachelorhood.

A large party assembled on the occasion, all of whom were well entertained and most bountifully provided for. The array of wedding gifts was brilliant, which shows the high esteem in which the bride and groom are held by their friends. May prosperity attend them.

Adrian Press: The latest sensation at Blissfield is the discovery of a genuine beer spring near the village. Col. Drew informs us that from the bank flows a clear stream of cool lager, of superior flavor. If this should be true it would be far better than any gold mine.

Clinton News: The remains of Cornelius Mandeville, who lived at Philo, Ill., were brought here for burial Tuesday. Mr. Mandeville was related by marriage to Henry Starrett and Mrs. Geo. Runyan. He lived formerly in Tecumseh, about two miles west of the village on the Monroe turnpike. He was a man about 95 years old and was buried beside his wife.

Probably the vilest smells to be found in this State are to be experienced in the rear of Sink's hotel. It is a wonder that a plague has not already visited that locality.—Tecumseh Cor. Adrian Times.

JANAUSCHEK.

The greatest living tragedienne, Madame Janauschek, will appear at the opera house at Adrian on Monday evening, the 16th. The Boston Advertiser says: "To praise Janauschek is to gild refined gold." And the best of our theater goers, who have had perhaps more than an abundance of the light, and often times trashy productions of the present day, will welcome the first appearance of the illustrious article whose plays are rightly known as the classics of the stage.

Monday evening's performance will consist of the beautiful emotional drama, from the Swedish, of Frederikh Bremer's wonderful novel, "The Neighbors," entitled "Mother and Son."

This piece is not played by any other actress, the various emotions depicted requiring the dramatic genius of Janauschek to faithfully portray them. Our people may expect such a performance as they can only see again on the return of the same company.

THE C. L. S. C.

EDITOR HERALD:

I clip the following from a late issue of the "Clinton News":

The Chautauqua class has been organized, but as investigation reveals a somewhat different prospect from what the term really implies, the enterprise will doubtless lose many valuable members who originally designed entering. You are informed that you can purchase the text books, pay membership fee of 50 cents and become a member of the famous class of Dr. Vincent, which already numbers 20,000. Subsequent to these preliminaries of introduction, you can learn your lessons, recite them when and to whom you please, and have the privilege of meeting the class in Tecumseh once a month. This arrangement savors too strongly of Vincent money, too little of real intellectual benefit to satisfy the ordinary literary enthusiast. PEARL DIAMOND.

I was so amused at the absurd crudities exhibited by the writer, who displays a lack of investigation of the subject, that I cannot resist the necessity of at least making the matter more intelligible to those who may desire to take up the reading prescribed by the C. L. S. C.

Four summers ago the movement was inaugurated at Lake Chautauqua in western New York, for the promotion of intelligence and culture among people. "This new organization aims to promote habits of reading and study in nature, art, science, and in secular and sacred literature, in connection with the routine of daily life (especially among those whose educational advantages have been limited), so as to secure to them the college student's general outlook upon the world and life, and to develop the habit of close, connected, persistent thinking," and yet "Pearl Diamond" is afraid that the "enterprise will lose many valuable members who originally designed entering."

How carefully the investigation must have been conducted is shown by the disappointment made apparent by Pearl Diamond in the pre-conceived ideas entertained by that individual.

Neither the founder or members of the C. L. S. C. ever claimed more for it than what it purports to be; a healthful course of reading and study covering the principal subjects of the college curriculum, but omitting of necessity its drill in mathematics and languages, giving to the English reader an outlook over the field of learning, and some acquaintance with the masterpieces of literature, ancient and modern, employing books and compendiums for the mastery of outlines, and appointing more extensive works to be read; a course which the individual could pursue alone, if necessary or desired, yet adapted for associated study; sufficiently simple to invite the masses, and to lead them on without discouragement from its difficulties or its extent, yet so thorough as not to be deemed superficial by the more learned; a course of study in which if the prescribed time is faithfully spent with its thoughtful and wisely-chosen books, will impart to any mind a knowledge of literature, a measure of intelligence, and an intellectual training, by no means to be despised.

Endorsed and taken up by such men as Pres. Chadbourne, of Williams College; Pres. Warren, of Boston University; Chancellor Howard Crosby, William Cullen Bryant, Pres. Garfield, Joseph Cook, J. G. Holland, Judge Tourgee, and hundreds of others, it refutes the assertion of "Pearl Diamond," "too little of real intellectual benefit to satisfy the ordinary literary enthusiast."

I have read the required reading of the Chautauqua class for two years, and although I was at first disposed to regard it as child's work, and only adapted to those who had enjoyed very limited privileges in literary or school life, I soon found my mistake, and can now cheerfully and conscientiously recommend it to all who may desire to take a course of reading both instructive and healthful in morals and sentiment, and yet not so intricate as to become burdensome to the reader. "Pearl Diamond's" statement that "this savors too strongly of Vincent money" is scarcely worthy of notice, as it is a well-known fact to all who know or care to know that Dr. J. H. Vincent never has received a single penny of the money required for fees, and that it all goes to cover the expenses of the secretary's office to procure printed blanks, stationery and postage, etc.

Between thirty-five and forty persons have already signified their intention to unite with the C. L. S. C. in this village. The circle meets on Friday evening of this week at 7:30 o'clock in room No. 1, M. E. Church, for the purpose of organization, election of officers, and projecting a plan of work for the year. All who have united and all who may desire to unite are requested to be present at this meeting. R. B. HOUSE.

Adrian Times: A large amount of business has been transacted during the term of circuit court which closed Friday. Fifteen criminal cases were disposed of, besides eighteen law cases and twenty-one cases in chancery.—The law cases alone filled 56 pages of the court record, which did not tend to lighten the labors of the clerk very materially.

ED. ROWLAND.

A NEIGHBORLY CHAT.

Mrs. Smith, after the old-time fashion of some country neighborhoods, had [illegible] to Mrs. Worth's house, intending to spend the afternoon. Had she been in some houses perhaps her conversation would have been gossipy—even slanderous—in its character but Mrs. Worth, she knew, was not one to encourage anything of the kind, so before she was aware she was discoursing with her hostess topics of a very different nature.

"Are you mending Laura's dress?" asked Mrs. Smith, in a tone of deepest curiosity.

"Yes—my dear," answered Mrs. Worth.

"Because she's twenty years old—quite big enough to do for her own needs, isn't she?"

"Big enough, yes—but she hasn't the time."

"Haven't the time, indeed! Why Mrs. Worth, I never saw your Laura doing anything."

"Mrs. Smith, you must remember she goes to school."

"Goes to school! So do my girls. But there is plenty of time for mending out of school hours."

"Not in my house." Mrs. Worth spoke quite firmly. "She leaves home at 8 in the morning and does not get back until 5 in the afternoon. When could she sew?"

"An hour before supper, or two hours in the evening."

"Why, Mrs. Smith, she forgot her lessons, they have to do in the evening, and I certainly think she is entitled to her one hour before supper for rest and amusement, and after her hard day's work."

"Well, I don't think so. I think, as long as I am young I shall use my time to the best advantage, and enjoy themselves doing nothing. It's little enough for me to get some work out of them when they come home."

"I say it's cruel, children's constitutions are not made of iron." Mrs. Worth was growing indignant.

"That's all very well to say, but are children any better now than they were forty years ago? Their mothers and grandmothers had to get up and do a hard day's work before they went to school."

"Perhaps—but, perhaps, if the children in the past had not been so shamefully overworked, the children in the present would not have strength enough to do their work."

"Well, I suppose you know best, Mrs. Worth, but I should think, if I were you, I would be anxious about the greatest amount of good I could get out of my children while they are young, and not be so anxious about an education that may never be of any use to them."

"Mrs. Smith, such a question should not be considered a moment—except, perhaps, in case of necessity, pressing. But this is not as much my duty to children as it is to my husband and myself. The Lord gave me an intellect just as much as he gave my husband, and I should be false to my trust if I never permitted it to get out of rapid rust. Do you see my argument? Now, they are growing up, and I am anxious that they should be able to take a place in the world, and be able to earn a living."

"Well, Mrs. Smith, you forget, I think, that I have a boy to educate, and I want to give him the best I can."

"Yes, I know, but I think that is another question. Mr. Worth is able to give his children an education, and he is willing to do it, and I am willing to do my share, and I think it is a great pleasure to me to have my children well educated."

"Well, I suppose it is, but I think it is a mistake to educate girls as well as boys. They are only in the way of their mothers, and they get married and have children of their own, and then they have to hire a girl to do their work. I know I have to do it, and I think it is a great nuisance."

"Perhaps it is, if they marry. But suppose they do not marry, what then? Are they to be a burden on their fathers and mothers all their lives? Suppose they do marry, and their husbands die, and they have to support themselves and children, what then? Ought they not to be able to earn a living?"

"There you go with your theories. I don't believe in them. I believe in a girl being a girl, and when she gets married, her husband must take care of her and her children."

"Suppose he cannot?"

"Then they must be very stubborn if they do not."

"Suppose they cannot afford to have children at all. No man has any right to marry who sees no prospect of supporting a family, do you think so, Mrs. Smith?"

"No, I cannot say that I do. But what is the use of an education, unless one means to get a living?"

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

Of Duchess Co., N. Y., 80 Years of Age, Suffered Continually for Many Years From Stone in the Bladder.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the world. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable, and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

The Reasons Why

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," for sale by all druggists.

A DAILY EVENT!

The Receipt of Letters Like the Following:

COMMONWEALTH, Wis., July 20, '82.

DR. PENGELLY:—Please send me one more of your Zoa-Phora. The one bottle I have used has done wonders. I have been under doctors' care more or less for five years. Have suffered from Inflammation, Ulceration and Prolapsus Uteri, weakness and heavy head, in fact felt worn out, not able to sit up. I am feeling just splendid now, and shall continue Zoa-Phora until cured. MRS. N. W. HAMAR.

From Mrs. John Spitler, No. 28 Wilt St., Fort Wayne, Ind.:

I have been suffering for over 16 years with spasmodic pain in my head, and general nervous debility. I had a severe attack of pain in my head two weeks ago, caused by weakness and nervous exhaustion. I really thought I should die. We had Zoa-Phora in the house, and my husband said we would test it to the uttermost. He gave it to me, according to directions, for several cases, and in less than two hours, to his great satisfaction, I had what he called immediate relief, and felt like going to sleep. I advise all ladies who suffer with nervous or sick headache, or any form of female weakness, to use your Zoa-Phora, for there is no medicine to compare with it. May 15th, 1882.

JERSEYVILLE, Ill., April 25, '82.

DR. PENGELLY—Dear Sir:—I am more than pleased with the effects of your Zoa-Phora in our daughter's case. I am surprised to see how she has improved. She is gaining in weight and color; her nerves are steady, and the distress she suffered in her chest is entirely all gone. I firmly believe that Zoa-Phora is all that saved her. I am willing you should use my letter, for I am not afraid to tell what a wonderful cure your medicine is, and I would like all who suffer to try it.

Yours Respectfully, MRS. SARAH RANDOLPH.

I shall always remember gratefully the good health your medicine has brought my daughter. LEWIS RANDOLPH.

Bright's Disease.

The rapid increase of late of this formidable and generally fatal disease of the kidneys, and the frequent record of death from it, makes a probable cure of it a matter of great interest to those afflicted with it. Doctors, after applications of medical skill and effort for such patients, give them up to die. A remarkable case of this kind, of a gentleman in a prominent position, has come to the knowledge of the writer from the lips of the patient, which I am induced to give to the public through your widely-circulated newspaper, together with the formula for its cure as successfully used by him.

L. F. Farmer, Esq., General Passenger Agent of the Pennsylvania R. R., became severely afflicted with Bright's Disease, so much so that his doctors in Philadelphia and New York gave him up as incurable. He then went, as he thought to die, to his old home in Connecticut, so weak as to require aid to get up the steps of his father's house. At this time he fell in with the article recommended as a cure. All else having failed to do him any good, he resolved to try it. He did so, adhering to its requirements rigidly, and was restored to health again solely by it. He is now New England agent of the Pennsylvania R. R., at Boston, restored to perfect health again, a fine specimen of manly vigor, brought about by this system of cure, as follows:

Specific for heart disease, dropsy, dyspepsia, diabetes, all troubles of the kidneys, and chronic diarrhœa.

1 Tablespoon of Skim Milk	every	hour	1st day.
2 "	"	"	2d "
3 "	"	"	3d "
4 "	"	"	4th "
5 "	"	"	5th "
6 "	"	"	6th "
7 "	"	"	7th "
8 "	"	"	8th "

Commencing the 8th day to break one-half slice of bread in the milk (but no crust of the bread) three times a day.

9 Tablespoons of Skim Milk	every	hour	9th day.
10 "	"	"	10th "
11 "	"	"	11th "
12 "	"	"	12th "
13 "	"	"	13th "
14 "	"	"	14th "
15 "	"	"	15th "

On and after the 16th day take 15 tablespoons Skim Milk every hour, daily, except one hour before your usual hour for dinner, and one hour after dinner. For dinner, take as much rare beef as you feel like, with a slice of bread (no crust), and a half-cup of coffee (sugar or milk).

For breakfast and supper, break one slice of bread (no crust) in the milk.

The bread should be 48 hours old, never less than 24.

If the milk sours on the stomach, put in it a tablespoonful of lime-water to a pint of milk.

If you should become costive, eat a fig or two at and after use of beef and coffee.

The first three or four days it will require a severe mental effort to "eat or drink nothing but milk," but after the first five days you will become accustomed to the system, and not feel that strong desire for table food.

It is strongly recommended to all afflicted with this fatal disease to give the above remedy a strict and vigorous trial, which will probably restore to health again many who now think themselves incurable.—F., in Portland Trans.

The Latest John Brown and Queen Victoria Story.

A great many stories get afloat from time to time, of which Victoria's servant, John Brown, is either the hero or the subject. No doubt most of them are indebted to a whole piece of cloth for their manufacture, though now and then an authentic one gets out. I can tell you one about him that is in a measure apropos of the subject just referred to, and also combines the virtues of recent occurrence as to its incidents, and undoubted authority as to its recital, my informant of the facts being none other than one of the Queen's equerries. Prince Frederick Augustus of Schleswig Holstein, the elderly German who some years ago married the Queen's third daughter, the Princess Helena, holds the position of Ranger of Windsor Park. The office is of course a sinecure, a fat income, and a fine residence in Windsor Park (called Frogmore) being given the incumbent for doing nothing. It seems that during the Ascot races, when the neighborhood of Windsor was thronged with the elite, the German prince was desirous of giving a garden party. His house being within the limits of a royal desmesne, it became his duty, in accordance with the sovereign's prerogative, to submit the list of his intended guests to the Queen for her approval before an invitation could be issued. Her Majesty, who, where her rights are concerned, is more exact and precise about small observances than many people suppose, read over the list with care. Then she sent for the prince, and told him that it had her approbation with but one exception. It did not include the name of John Brown. She desired that he should be invited. The prince said nothing, but bowed low and took his leave. On the appointed day the party came off, and Mr. Brown was there; but he was the only guest. The prince had obeyed the royal command, but had invited no one else. The Queen heard of it, of course, but thought it wiser to say nothing. The recent appointment, however, of the Duke of Teck as her special parliamentary reporter in place of the prince might possibly indicate a desire to show her displeasure.—London Correspondent.

A Trifling Affair.

The following is said to have happened when the legislature adjourned some months ago, but we did not hear of it until yesterday:

A very prominent member of the legislature, who had been paying a great deal of attention to the widow Bombazine, told her, on calling with his carpet-bag in his hand, that he was about to leave Austin, and she must forget him. She replied that he had trifled with her affections, and now he proposed to leave her desolate.

"It's not my fault," he replied, with tears in his eyes. "I would keep on trifling with your affections if I could only stay here, but as I can't, you will have to get some other trifling cuss to stay here. The organic law is to blame that limits the sessions of the legislature and compels me to leave Austin and go back to my family."—Texas Siftings.

The Hedgehog's Mode of Defense.

The hedgehog is one of the best protected of living animals. Marching securely under the guardianship of its thorn-spiked armor, it recks little of any foe save man. * * * The formidable array of bristling spines with which the back is more or less covered offers a cheval-de-frise of sharp spikes toward any animal that may present itself as an enemy. Another peculiarity is the power possessed by these creatures of rolling themselves into a round ball, by placing the head on the breast, drawing up the legs, and curling the body firmly round the members. By this posture the hedge-hogs render themselves invulnerable to almost any animal that may attack them. * * * When in this curious attitude, the hedgehog can not be unrolled by main force as long as any life remains in the body, for there is an enormously developed muscle, with a very thick margin, which spreads over the back and round the sides, and which, when contracted, holds the creature in so firm an embrace that it will be torn in pieces rather than yield its point.

The spines of this animal are about an inch long, and naturally lie flat on the back, directed toward the tail. But by a peculiar arrangement they are erected when the owner coils himself. In shape the spine is not unlike a large pin, being sharply pointed at one extremity, and furnished at the other with a round, bead-like head, and rather abruptly bent near the head. If the skin be removed from the hedgehog, the quills are seen to be pinned, as it were, through the skin, being retained by their round heads, which are acted upon by the peculiar muscle which has already been mentioned.

Protected by this defense, the hedgehog is enabled to throw itself from considerable heights, to curl itself into a ball as it descends, and to reach the ground without suffering any harm from its fall. A hedgehog has been seen repeatedly to throw itself from a wall some twelve or fourteen feet in height, and to fall upon the hard ground without appearing to be even inconvenienced by its tumble. On reaching the ground, it would unroll itself and trot off with perfect unconcern.—H. L. Fairchild, in the Popular Science Monthly.

Stride of Science.

We call the attention of our eastern friends to the fall styles in lynching in Wyoming and to the advancement thus being made in crude justice. The telegraph pole has about played out here now as a western aid to speedy vindication and the anvantage of a box car as a convenient lynching apparatus will be seen by all, and the day is not far distant when a car fitted up like a wrecking car only with a vigilance committee, coroner, coroner's jury, rope, etc., will be the popular thing. If the day ever comes when such a necktie chariot roams up and down the land, people will begin to look over their past record when they see it coming, and reform.

Wyoming may not be very recherche in many ways, but she has made some gallant strides in the way of sudden equity. Justice may be slow in the old world, but in Wyoming results come treading upon the heels of crime and effect somehow seems to follow rapidly on the trail of cause.

The Pullman Palace Lynching car will have every convenience and be managed so as to give perfect satisfaction to all. It will be held subject to telegram and when the average bold, bad man, who is too handy with a six shooter, kills the principal business man in town, it will be coupled to an engine as soon as the wicked man can get himself in shape, the excursion train will come and take him along. When business is good, and several telegrams have to be attended to the first man can be hung while the car is making forty miles per hour on the way to the second man.

No doubt there are croakers who will sneer at this suggestion and claim that it is impossible, but other inventors besides us have been hooted at. When Galileo invented the steamboat and Archimedeas discovered her lever, and Edison found out that the earth revolved on its hind feet, they were all laughed at because they were so far in advance of the age in which they lived. That may be our fate, but we cannot help it, when we get one of those glorious ideas, we just go to work and print it, and then let humanity avail itself of the statement or turn its back upon us and grope on through the black nights of ages.—Lamarie Boomerang.

Stuffing an Elephant.

The carcass of an elephant, who last year figured prominently in a circus, is now being prepared for exhibition in the National Museum at Washington. All the bones have been preserved and have been cleaned, and are now being carefully articulated. When this is completed, the elephant in his bones and the elephant in his skin will be set up, side by side, on pedestals in the National Museum, and an unprejudiced public can judge as to the respective merits of these costumes for summer wear. The method employed in preparing such a huge mass as this elephant for the museum is a very interesting one. As the bones were to be used, another skeleton had to be made. This was effected by building a wooden framework of the proper dimensions. Over this framework tow was spread, and on the top was placed a coating of soft mud. The skin was then drawn over, and the pliable mud foundation preserved all the irregularities of the skin, so that it looks exactly as it did when on the live elephant. The trunk hangs in a natural position, with the end slightly curled up from the ground. The eyes, made by a celebrated optician, are exact counterfeits of the natural eye; so that, when the elephant gets mounted on its pedestal in the museum, it will look deceitfully alive.

A traveler was leaning at night against a railing at the Harper's Ferry railroad station. A locomotive came along, and he sprang lightly over the rail to escape possible danger. He thought it was a meadow on the other side, but knew his mistake when he struck in a muddy stream forty feet below. On being rescued he was asked his name. "I wouldn't tell you for a thousand dollars," he replied; "describe me simply as a fool."

Mr. M. A. Whitely, Toledo, Ohio, writes: "After trying all advertised medicines for nervous weakness and early decay, I gave up in despair, and resigned myself to that seemingly inevitable, a premature grave. Happening to hear a druggist recommend Brown's Iron Bitters for dizziness, I bought myself a bottle. I am most agreeably surprised to find myself restored to perfect health, strength, and manhood. I feel sure the cure is permanent, yet in future I intend to observe more carefully the laws of health."

THE APPLE AND POTATO CROPS.

The potatoes of this year's crop are of unusual size and quality. The crop is everywhere better than last year, except in New York. The crop of Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan is larger than that of 1880. Illinois has nearly double the crop of last year. Iowa has three times the quantity she had last year, and nearly double the acreage of two years ago. The culture of the potato is increasing rapidly in that State. They are selling there this season for 15 cents per bushel.

Cincinnati handles 2,000 car-loads of the root every season, chiefly for the southern market, supplying Atlanta, Mobile, Nashville, and largely Louisville, besides many other southern and southwestern points. Chicago competes with Cincinnati for the same trade, but the competition is not close.

The report has been circulated that apples are a short crop. The fact is that this is a good year for that fruit, especially in the west. Reports of big crops come in from Illinois, Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky and West Virginia. In the latter State the crop is immense. The same report comes from New York, Jersey and Maine. Kansas is quite an apple country, and increases in importance to the dealers in fruit every year. It will one day be as famous as any of the eastern apple fields.

Hudson Gazette: One of the seats at one of the tables in the Comstock House dining room is deserving of the singular appellation, "matrimonial chair," its last three occupants having successively and prominently figured in marital ceremonies. The seat at present remains without a candidate for conubial bliss, but in an unguarded moment some young male guest will proably flop into the fatal trap and share the fate of his predecessors.

Adrian Press: The Springville Cornet band furnishes the music for the county fair. The boys have not long been organized but they are enthusiastic, practice faithfully, and work hard to improve in playing. Their selections were rendered very finely, and they received many approving commendatory remarks by the visitors at the fair. They play without any great flourish of trumpets, make no claim to greatness, but with becoming modesty quietly proceeded to business. They did exceedingly well, and made a very favorable impression.

The jail at Fonda, New York, was set afire by a hardened young burglar named Cafferty, who secured some matches in tobacco, tore a hole in the plaster, stuffed in straw, and ignited it. Twenty-five prisoners were safely removed to the court-house, but the jail was totally destroyed. The incendiary has been placed in irons to await a trial for arson.

Frank James, the Missouri outlaw, surrendered himself to Governor Crittenden at Jefferson City Thursday evening, and will be handed over to the authorities of Jackson county for trial. No overtures have of late been made by the state toward the bandit. He was accompanied by Major Edwards, of Sedalia. On meeting the governor James handed over his pistols, with the remark that no one save himself had touched them for twenty years.

Joseph Fry, an aged miser of Vincennes, Indiana, has closed his career of money-getting. Some years ago, the board of health required him to procure a new suit of clothes. Inside his shirt there was Friday found a stinking mass of greenbacks amounting to $4,250. His chief avocation has been the collection of cigar-stumps, and he died from attempting to live on green apples. His will gives $250 to the Catholic church, and the remainder to a sister in Germany.

In the American board of foreign missions at Portland, Rev. Dr. Alden announced a financial crisis which scarcely admitted of hope. William E. Dodge electrified the assemblage by offering to double his subscription, an example which was instantly followed by a dozen gifts of $1,000 each. A touching appeal by Dr. Webb, of Boston, caused fifteen hundred men and women to rise to their feet simultaneously and pledge twice the sum they had previously offered, the total amount secured being $50,000.

ELY'S CREAM BALM reduces inflammation. Sores in the nasal passages are healed in a few days. Catarrhal headache is dissipated. Senses of smell, taste and hearing are restored. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger.

ONLY TWO BOTTLES.

Messrs. Johnson, Holloway & Co., wholesale druggists of Philadelphia, Pa., report that some time ago a gentleman handed them a dollar, with a request to send a good catarrh cure to two army officers in Arizona. Recently the same gentlemen told them that both the officers and the wife of Gen. John C. Fremont, Gov. of Arizona, had been cured of catarrh by the two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm.

MACON CENTER.

This neighborhood was thrown into a frenzy of excitement yesterday over the workings of "King Alcohol." It appears that Sam Craig went to Tecumseh alone with single horse and buggy, and, as usual, filled himself with whisky. In his effort to pass everything on his way home he ran into a wagon, warping one of his buggy wheels so that its track harmonized with the surroundings. Still further on he overtook Mrs. Wm. McCarbery and son, running into their buggy, but not catching on. When near L. Osgood's he stopped his horse, and got out, and while blubbering his experience to a passer-by his horse started on and ran home. In its flight, when descending the Macon hill, it collided with a carriage driven by Mrs. Wm. Gregg and daughter, upsetting the carriage and throwing the ladies to the ground with great violence, breaking Mrs. Gregg's collar bone, and otherwise seriously injuring both ladies. They were taken to John Stewart's, and Dr. Nelson sent for, who reduced the fracture, and at this writing they are doing as well as could be expected. The buggy was badly wrecked, and the horse nearly ruined. Thus ended a drunk, the like of which is nearly an every day occurrence, except as to serious results.

RESOLUTIONS.

The resolutions of the Prohibition convention, held last week, were as follows:

Resolved, That we regard the manufacture, importation, exportation, sale or use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage as a crime against God and man, and that it ought to be prohibited by legal enactment.

Resolved, That we deem the license, taxation, regulation or permission of the sale, gift or use of spirituous liquors as a beverage, as a crime against the morals, and especially against the Christian sentiment of our country.

Resolved, That we hold the party now in power in this state largely responsible for the crime consequent upon the sale and use of rum in our state.

Resolved, That we regard the existence of the saloon in our county as evil and only evil, and that continually; and that for the sake of our homes and our children, and for the good of our common humanity, we demand its removal.

Resolved, That we reaffirm our abiding faith in the justice of the civil and political equality of woman, believing that her enfranchisement will be a powerful agent in promoting the purity of the ballot box.

Resolved, That we express our hearty sympathy with the abolition of polygamy, of executive, judicial and legislative patronage; the election of all offices by the people as far as possible, and in every kind of civil service reform; the universal education of the youth; the preservation of public lands for homestead purposes; the abolition of monopolies, and the control of corporations to such an extent as to prevent the abuse of the interests of the laboring class.

Mr. Patterson Meant What He Said.

Lyman Dorman, Huntingdon, Aug. 22, 1866, writes: "I hereby certify that my boy, ten years old, was taken sick with typhoid fever, followed by congestion of the lungs. Dr. Dyer, an eminent physician of this place, stated that he thought the boy would run down with Quick Consumption. A Mr. Patterson told me that Coe's Cough Balsam was curing similar cases, and advised me to purchase it. When I carried it home my wife laughed at me, but I knew that Mr. Patterson meant just what he said, and I determined to try it. Two bottles effectually cured him, so that now he is as tough and healthy as anybody.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

October 12th.

The Board met at 9:30 A. M.

All unpaid drain orders to be brought before the Board were referred to the committee on drains.

Sundry claims of the Times and Press were allowed.

Mr. Warren reported the sale of the old jail property to Mr. Gilliland.

The committee on apportionment of taxes and assessment rolls reported that several rolls were without a supervisor's certificate. After considerable discussion the question of the necessity of such certificate was referred to the judiciary committee.

After allowing a large number of small claims, ranging from a few cents to $35 each, the Board adjourned until 2 P. M.

October 13th.

Thursday afternoon the judiciary committee reported on the question referred to them, as to whether the assessment rolls of the several townships and wards should have attached to them a certificate of the supervisor that he had assessed the property at its true cash value: First—That they find all the rolls are certified as required by law by the board of review. Second—That whether the boards of review had before them, at the time of making the assessment, evidence that the supervisors had valued the property at its true cash value we cannot say. But as the several boards of review have properly certified to their rolls, the committee presumes that they had such evidence as was necessary. Third—The rolls being properly certified by the several boards of review, the same are to be conclusively presumed to be valid. Report received and adopted.

The committee on public buildings was instructed to build a cellar under the coal house at the jail at a cost not to exceed $200.

A petition from the highway commissioner of Cambridge was referred to a special committee, consisting of Sups. Dewey, Harkness and Parsons.

This morning Mr. Hill presented a petition asking the appointment of a drain commissioner; also some claims for work done on county drains, and moved that the subject matter be referred to the committee on drain.

Mr. Luke moved that the election of a superintendent of the poor be made a special order for Wednesday next at 10 A. M.

The clerk was instructed to procure blank warrants and certificates for the assessment rolls of the various townships and wards. Carried.

H. C. Smith, in behalf of the prosecuting attorney, made a report of the cases prosecuted from April 1, 1882, to Oct. 1, 1882. The report was referred to a special committee, and the committee instructed to report the amount of fines, and the disposal of the same.

Mr. Richards appeared before the board, and asked that the supervisor of Raisin be allowed to spread certain drain taxes on the roll of that township.

The committee on apportionment reported, their report being adopted, and the assessment rolls referred to the committee on equalization.

Adjourned until 2 P. M.

October 14th.

The Board yesterday afternoon passed a resolution withdrawing the reward offered for the capture of Thos. J. Navin on the 5th of November, the same day on which the reward offered by the city expires.

The committee on drains reported in favor of paying an order on county drain No. 10, in favor of Miles M. Wilcox, out of the county contingent fund. A motion to accept and adopt the report was lost. It was also recommended by the same committee that the county clerk be instructed to draw an order in favor of Joseph Leonard, of Deerfield, to the amount of $100 on drain No. 95. Carried.

Mr. Pratt presented the claim of Dr. E. Mann, for services rendered, to the amount of $27.75. Mr. Harkness moved that it be allowed at one-half its face value. Lost.

The report of H. F. Barnes, special drain commissioner on Lenawee special drain, was referred to the committee on drains.

A large number of accounts were allowed.

Adjourned until 9 A. M. to-day.

This morning the Board met, and after calling the roll and finding no business on hand, adjourned until 9 A. M. Monday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, of Washington, D. After taking the first bottle I felt great relief, my cough being easy, and the hemorrhage ceased. I am pleased to testify to what a blessing your medicine is.

An Old Letter.

I burned the others, one by one; but my courage failed at last.
And I snatched this, scorched and yellow, where the fire's breath had passed.
I could not let it be there, for it turned like a thing in vain;
And I love it for the old times' sake, that never come again.

They used to call me beautiful; I had nothing else beside.
There was none more proud or vain than he in all the world wide;
And it's still a sort of pleasure—very measure—to think it true
To know he once could think such thoughts, and write such words of me.

But my poor beauty faded; 'twas the only thing I had.
I was always weak and foolish, and my whole life grew sad.
For the cruel daughter fever left my spirit jaded to
Oh, the pain that beauty's fleeting, and my love no more loved me.

I'd have loved him all the more, for that or any grief beside;
But then he was so different. Oh, if I had only died!
And yet, how can I wish him to have suffered in my stead?
I think it would have grieved him then to hear that I was dead.

I have nothing to forgive him; still, he very soon forgot.
Men have much to do, and think of that we girls have not.
A man has little thought to spare for his own chosen wife;
Women's minds are very narrow, and a girl's love is her life.

They say I should forget him, but I cannot if I would.
For since my beauty left me I have tried hard to be good;
And his name is always on my lips, when I pray to God above—
Oh, surely I may pray for one I can never cease to love.

I was never fit to be his wife, even when my face was fair;
But every one may pray to heaven; we are all equal there.
And God, in his great mercy, will not pass my prayers by,
I have one thing left to live for—to pray for him till I die.

A SUSPENDED ELOPEMENT.

I had loved Bella for more than a year. When I say that I was over twenty-five, my readers of the sterner sex will, I am sure, be impressed by my constancy.

Bella had money. Not that this had, of course, anything to do with my extraordinary devotion, but it served for a time to be the barrier in our happiness. I first met and fell a victim to Bella's charms when her mother was alive. Her father had then been dead several years. The old lady took to me. I have a knack of getting on with old ladies. This is a very useful gift when they are well off, and are the mothers of lovely daughters. I advise all young men to cultivate it. The main point is always to be more attentive to the mother than the daughter. It is well to throw in occasional remarks about the apparent degeneracy of the age, and allude to the superior constitutions and characters of the preceding generation.

All was working smoothly for Bella and me, when cruel fate, in the shape of a drunken car-driver, crushed the mother under its Juggernautian wheels. We prosecuted the driver, and an intelligent jury, largely influenced by the wealth of the car company, decided that pedestrians have no rights which car-drivers are bound to respect.

It turned out, by her father's will, Bella, in the event of her mother's death, was, until her twenty-first year, to be placed under the guardianship of an uncle, who was a farmer in Vermont. This same uncle was an admirable specimen of the typical Vermonter. He could freeze to the chance of making a dollar harder than a lobster's claw to a small boy's investigating finger. He had two great hulking sons, and determined that Bella should marry one or the other. Indeed he believed he was acting most kindly in giving her a choice instead of insisting on her taking the first-born. When old Green found out that I had come into the neighborhood and was hanging about the premises he sternly warned me off, and even hinted at the fierceness and number of the dogs which populated his yard at night. I took his word for the dogs—it was about the only thing I would have taken it for.

Bella was virtually a prisoner. The old farm house was three stories high—a very unusual thing in that part of the country—and she was locked in at night in her room on the top floor. With great difficulty I managed to get one or two letters to her, but so closely was she watched and guarded during the day that speech with her was impossible. I was in despair. There was yet a year to run before she could claim release from this guardianship. Was there no means of escape possible?

While I was pondering over this question in the little hotel where I had now been staying for some weeks, I heard a strange voice addressed to the proprietor in loud tones, and I distinctly heard the words "portable fire-escape." Instantly an inspiration flashed through my mind. I joined the party, and in doing so heard these words:

"It's just the simplest thing in the world. A two-year-old babe couldn't hurt itself. No sir, it'ud like to have one for a plaything, and 'ud amuse itself all day hauling itself to the top o' the house and lettin' itself down again. They're so light and easy that when folks don't want escapes I often sells them as baby-jumpers. Just try one! it's only $4.50. Make it for you, as an advertisement, seein' you keeps a hotel, and you'd ought to have one for the protection of your guests."

"Guess not. My place is only two stories high; and if we have a fire, they can jump out or burn, just as they darn please." And the careful hotel-keeper strolled off.

"What have you there, my friend?" I asked of the stranger.

"A portable fire-escape. Simplest thing in the world." But I was fooled to come to this section, anyhow. There isn't a house high enough for a man to hurt himself much if he rolled off the roof, and a Vermonter 'ud sooner take chances on his life than spend a dime, any day."

"I'll tell you how you can sell one escape for $20 and no trouble either."

"You will! I'm your oyster."

I unfolded my plot, and found a sympathetic listener. He was to go up to Bella's uncle's house and try to sell an escape. Of course, we knew that would be perfectly hopeless. So, after being rebuffed, he was to insist on leaving one on trial for a week or two, till he came around again. He was also to try to smuggle a letter to Bella, explaining that she was at night to get possession of the escape, attach it to her bedstead, and slide down into my waiting arms, which would be waiting as near as the dogs would let them. On the night she was ready, she was to signal in a certain way with a candle at the window.

The peddler started off, and soon returned, having been successful in getting the letter to Bella, and having given an exhibition of how to use the escape. For several nights I waited in vain for the signal, but at last it was shown. I did not hear the dogs about, and I gently crept nearly under the window. It was opened.

"Are you there, Bella?" I whispered.

"Yes."

"You're not afraid, dear?"

"Not very. I've tied the rope around the bedstead, and I don't think I can slip out of the loops. Have you a boggy waiting?"

"Yes, dear, at the first turn of the road."

"Very well. I am going to try now. Oh!"

She had launched herself off from the sill and was descending beautifully.

"Don't come too fast, dear. Use the check rope if you feel you are coming too quickly."

She had got to the second floor, when there was an unaccountable stoppage.

"What's the matter?" I cried.

"It won't move."

"Shake the rope."

"I have."

"Loosen the check."

"It is quite loose."

"Try to pull up a bit."

"I can't. I'm stuck fast."

"Let me shake the rope."

"Try. Oh! oh! It's no use; it won't move."

"Can't you slip out of the loop and slide down the rope? I'll catch you."

"No, I can not. I am sitting in them and can't get out. Oh, what's to be done?"

"I'll try to climb up and see."

Bella sat dangling in the air, like Mohammed's coffin, between heaven and earth.

I tried to climb, but the rope was not half an inch thick, and I slipped back. Then came the tragic sequel. There was a rush of something behind me, and a bulldog seized me in that part which had been nearest to him as he approached. I have heard of soldiers riddled with bullets, or almost cut and thrust to pieces by swords and bayonets who have still advanced upon the enemy. I don't believe they could have done it with a bulldog hanging on rearward. If any one of my male readers doubts this aspersion of man's courage, let him get an angry bulldog and try.

Other dogs began to give tongue. Bella screamed. Lights were seen moving in the house.

"Go," she cried; "they will kill you if they find you."

"But I cannot leave you, Bella." I must own this was not true. I was leaving her in small sections down the dog's throat, and I felt I must run away.

"Go; save yourself."

By a convulsive effort I shook off the dog, a considerable portion of my trousers and a couple of good mouthfuls of my anatomy, and bounded over a fence and up a tree. From there I watched the triumphant Vermonters haul Bella into a second-story window. Then they came out, and with much crying and swearing began to look for me. I am happy to say they were unsuccessful. About two hours afterward I ventured to limp home.

Bella never tried to elope again. She remained proof against all the arguments of her uncle and the charms of the Green Mountain boys, and when she became legally her own mistress she became mine legally too.

Never saw that fire-escape man again. Perhaps it was better for him I didn't. He never called for his machine. Possibly he heard something of the story in his travels.

I don't know that there is any more to this tale, except never to use a rope fire-escape for an elopement. There must have been something prophetic in the instinct of the author of the old song, when he wrote:

When a lady elopes
Down a ladder of ropes,
She may go to Hong Kong for me.

Notions About Death.

There are two popular notions about death that, though they contradict one another, have adherents throughout Christendom. One is that what is called a natural death takes place with the ebb of the tide; the other, that it occurs after midnight, in what are called the small hours before dawn. The records show, as might have been expected, that the Black Rider, who respects neither age nor worldly condition, is indifferent in timing his visits. In this city last week the greatest number of deaths took place at 11 o'clock in the day, when there were seven; but there were five deaths in each of the hours of 3, 4, 7 and 10 o'clock in the morning, and 3, 4 and 7 o'clock in the evening. Four persons died at 5 o'clock, 6 o'clock and at 9 o'clock in the morning, and at 1 o'clock and 6 o'clock in the evening, and three persons died at each of the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock a. m. and 8, 10 and 11 o'clock p. m. There happened to be no deaths at 5 o'clock in the evening. There were ten more deaths before noon than after it.—New York Sun.

Why She Won't Marry.

Miss Risley-Seward, a daughter of ex-Solicitor of the Treasury Risley, became a great favorite with William H. Seward while Secretary of State, and subsequently accompanied him during his tour around the world. Mr. Seward in his will bequeathed to her $30,000 on condition that she should adopt his name. She accepted the money, adopted the name, and now refuses to marry, because she will not consent to change her name. At present she is in Italy studying the old monasteries of Tuscany.

A Washington couple were married in 1857; divorced in February, 1882; remarried July 2, 1882; re-divorced Sept. 22, 1882. Such is life.

A FAIR AMANUENSIS.

"Well, Benson, have I seen the last of them? Really I begin to believe my advertisement reached the eyes of every man in London out of employment, and not yet am I fully satisfied with a single applicant."

Thus I addressed myself, half to myself, half to my worthy butler, one morning in early May, when for two hours I had been industriously a horde of men, all anxious to obtain the situation of my private secretary.

I had had in all some two hundred letters, perhaps but from these I had selected twenty, nineteen of whom I had already seen. Also, the one the worthing of whose answer, perhaps, had pleased me most had not yet put in an appearance.

"There is one young person below, sir," responded Benson; "but it's not a man, sir. It's a young lady."

"A young lady! What can a woman want with me? However, I will see her. Show her up, Benson."

A few minutes later, a rustling of skirts informed me that my latest visitor had arrived upon the scene.

I looked up to find a young lady of twenty, perhaps, simply, almost shabbily dressed, but possessing a pair of very pretty eyes, which were taking me in with an intentness which, had I been a bashful man, would certainly have inspired a blush.

"I received a note from you this morning, Mr. Courtney," she said, in a voice which was at once sweet and refined.

"A note from me?" I stammered, in amaze.

Without further argument she rose, and laying on the table beside me a note, addressed in my own chirography to "Sidney Grant, Esq.," resumed her seat.

"The 'Esq.' was not quite correct, you see," she continued, "but I am Sidney Grant."

"I advertised for a male secretary," I explained, half amazed, half amused. "I am a bachelor, and living in bachelor quarters."

"I inferred it was a man you wished to fill the place, but inasmuch as the duties occupied only certain hours during the day, I thought it might be equally well filled by a woman. I am very desirous of such a position. I am a good and rapid penman, and, if my sex is not an insurmountable obstacle, I think that I might give you satisfaction."

The idea she presented to me was entirely new. Yet I really knew no reason why a woman should not do as well as a man. If she had no objections to accepting the post, I did not know why I should have any to granting it.

This, of course, was all mental, but when Sidney Grant, some fifteen minutes later, bade me good-morning, it was understood that from the following Monday, the hours between ten and four belonged to me, on consideration of a certain valuation.

Monday morning I wakened with a singular sensation that something unusual was about to happen. A few moments' consideration resolved the something into the fact that my new secretary was that day to enter upon her duties.

When I entered the apartment I had ordered prepared for her, I found her already at her post. Her hat and cloak were laid aside, and as she looked up with a grave smile to bid me good-morning, I started at the sudden discovery that an extremely pretty woman stood awaiting my orders.

This discovery gave me anything but pleasure. Instantly I became colder and more reserved.

As clearly and concisely as possible I tried to make her understand her duties. For a time I would lay the letters before her with a rough draught of my replies, but later, when she grew accustomed to my mode of expression, I would merely indicate the tone of the response, whether negative, affirmative, or the conditions to influence either.

She grasped my ideas very quickly, and at three o'clock sent me her replies. With one or two exceptions they were wholly satisfactory.

Two weeks passed along, everything working smoothly, when my correspondence became more involved. Some building was being done under my direction, and I was obliged to inspect plans and go into minute details, so that part of the time Miss Grant could only perform the manual labor at my dictation.

It was wonderful how much less irksome I found the task than I had anticipated. The fears I had had in the beginning, that my secretary would attempt to fascinate me, died. Her reserve and dignity equalled my own.

My secretary had been with me six weeks, and further than that she was assiduous in her duties and infinitely charming, I knew nothing.

I have forborne to state that, just at this period, I was placed in a most delicate and trying position. By the terms of my uncle's will, I was to marry my cousin, Alice Thornleigh, or forfeit to her one-half the estate.

The latter consideration would by no means have induced me to give my hand without my heart, since I was already abundantly provided with this world's goods; but I felt bound in honor to carry out my uncle's wish, so far as meeting my cousin, whom I had not seen since a child, and endeavoring, if possible, to make her the offer enforced upon me by his generosity.

I found her a very beautiful girl, but utterly cold and indifferent in manner. It certainly, however, I told myself, would not be difficult to learn to love her, and I resolutely set myself to the task; yet at the end of four weeks I was no nearer the desired result than at the beginning of that period.

One day, when I had just left Miss Grant to her duties, my butler startled me by the announcement that Mrs. and Miss Thornleigh had honored me by a call.

"We are so anxious to see you in your bachelor apartments, my dear boy!" exclaimed my aunt, as I welcomed her, "that I could not resist the impulse to bring Alice to see you. Now you must take us all over, and show us everything."

"Not there," I said, as we entered the library, and my aunt had moved towards the door her quick eye had detected. "That is my den!"

But as fate would have it, bearing my robes and utterly unsuspecting anything so unwanted as visitors, Miss Grant, wishing to ask me some question, herself opened the door. For a moment the ladies regarded each other in silence; then with a burning blush, Miss Grant withdrew, but not before my aunt had drawn herself up with conscious virtue and a look of disapproval.

"My dear," addressing herself to Alice, "we have evidently made a mistake in our intrusion. We owe apologies for it, as far as we may by leaving Mr. Courtney good morning."

"You need not, madam, on that point," I replied, coldly. "The young lady whom you have just seen is my secretary and amanuensis."

"I beg pardon for having brought Alice here," was the haughty reply, and the two ladies swept out of my doors.

I stood, troubled and perplexed, for a moment, then went into the study. Miss Grant was again busily writing, but I fancied that her face was very pale, and I wondered if she had overheard my aunt's words. She did not long leave me in doubt.

"It will be two months to-morrow, Mr. Courtney, since I entered upon my engagement with you. Will you kindly accept this short notice of my resignation?"

"Your resignation? You wish to leave me just when you have learned to understand all my ways, and have made me so dependent upon you?"

So dependent. Had I really uttered those words, and having uttered could I retract them? A thousand new ideas went whirling through my brain, but her voice calmed them.

"I have known always," she said, "that my position here was somewhat an anomalous one, but I thought I could reconcile its necessity to myself. I find that I am wrong. Thanks to your generosity, Mr. Courtney, my need is not so great as when I applied to you, and I shall doubtless be able before long to find some other employment. But however this may be, I shall always feel for you the deepest gratitude."

"You say you will be grateful, Sidney?" I answered. "Then prove it by remaining with me. I cannot do without my secretary; but we will give the post another name—I cannot do without my wife. Sidney, darling, when you stole my heart I do not know, but I think on that first morning when I determined to harden it against the wiles and fascinations of Sidney Grant."

So I won my wife, and so my Cousin Alice came into half my uncle's fortune.

Concerning the Feet.

A well-known surgeon who has made a specialty of disease of the leg and foot lately asserted that most of these diseases had their beginning in the injury to the nerves and muscles done by high-heeled shoes.

By the compression and false position into which the foot and ankle are thrown, some of the muscles are rendered totally useless, while a strain is put upon others which they are unable to bear; the toes are displaced, corns, bunions and scaly soles are produced. The nerves are bruised and actual disease follows.

This cruel distortion begins usually when a child is about two years old, and its fond mother thinks it time to "shape its feet," which is done by a pretty pair of stiff-laced heeled boots or shoes.

An orthopedic surgeon in New York published, not long since, a statement that the number of splayed feet in the country was increasing rapidly. "A splayed foot is one in which the arch of the instep is permanently broken down;" the foot is flat, ungainly and weak.

The cause he attributes in the main to high-heeled shoes; the French shoes in which the heel is placed a little forward, being less injurious than that made by American shoe-makers, in which it is placed at the back, and thus the strain is made greater.

The whole weight of the body in both cases falls on the small bones of the centre of the foot, which stretch like the span of a bridge from the piers of the toes at one end to the high peaked heel at the other.

Other causes of splayed feet are the habit among little girls of excessive jumping the rope, and a like immoderate use of roller skates. Moderate use of either is wholesome exercise; but it should be moderate.

The girls are not alone culpable on this medical indictment of vanity. Within the last year or two it has been the fashion among boys and very young men to wear shoes that run to a point and turn up in front slightly.

The whole of the five toes are contracted to the width of an inch. The shape of the foot is at once distorted to deformity, and the walk, which to be manly should be firm and free, becomes uneasy and mincing. Imagine the great athletes in the Greek arenas tip-toing in these pointed shoes.

One could laugh at the foolish boys if we did not know the stores of suffering which they are laying up for the future, in swollen bunions and enlarged joints. One sex has its share of vanity as well as the other. And the punishment of a passing folly in this case is sure and heavy.

Garibaldi's Discipline.

On one occasion an officer of his took a poor woman's horse from her and gave her a receipt, which, of course, was quite worthless. She came in tears to Garibaldi; she had lost all she had. Garibaldi took the paper, had the officer summoned before him, and in the presence of his whole staff, while the weeping woman stood by, said, "Did you take this horse?" "Yes, General; I was forced to; I had lost mine." "Did you write this paper, which you know is worthless?" "Yes, General." Then, turning to his aide-de-camp, he said, "Restore the horse to this poor woman," and, tearing up the paper, with a withering look at the offending officer, he added, "is this the way that Italians fight for the freedom of their country? Be no more soldier of mine!" and he sent him back to Rome.

They do say that the first question asked by a deacon visiting Egypt was: "Now what were the real facts of the Potiphar scandal?"

Jealousy.

Some poet has said that "All torments of the damned we find is only thee, Oh, Jealousy, thou tyrant of the mind." This is grandly sweeping and magnificently inaccurate. Any sufferer from Indigestion knows to the contrary. Indigestion, the villian of the tragedy played upon the gastric juices of the stomach can, and does double discount the horrors of jealousy. Jealousy is often an attendant upon the later, and when indigestion is removed, this jaundiced companion of a deranged liver flies. Taraxine is the best known remedy extant for impaired digestion, deranged liver, and diseases of the bowels and kidneys.

Very Shocking.

Old Sea-Captain John, in Paul Fort's "Mysterious Barrel" story, tells how he transported a gymnotus—and astonished the doctor. From South America one of the first electric eels that was ever carried to New York was brought. It was obtained in Brazil, and bought of some Indians for about six dollars.

We had lots of trouble with this fellow, for these eels live in fresh water, and if we had not had plenty of rain on the voyage, we couldn't have kept him alive, for the water he was in had to be changed every day.

We kept him on deck in a water-barrel which lay on its side in its chocks, with a square hole cut through the staves on the upper side to give the creature light and air.

When we changed the water a couple of sailors took hold of the barrel and turned it partly over, while another held a straw broom against the hole to keep the eel from coming out.

We would always know when the water had nearly run out, for then the eel lay against the lower staves, and even the wood of the barrel would be so charged with electricity that the sailors could hardly hold on to the ends of the barrel.

They'd let go with one hand and take hold with the other, and then they'd let go with that and change again. At first I didn't believe that the fellows felt the eel's shocks in this way; but when I took hold myself one day, I found they weren't shamming at all. Then we turned the barrel back and filled it up with fresh water, and started the eel off for another day.

He got along first-rate, and kept well and hearty through the whole of the voyage. When we reached New York we anchored at Quarantine and the health-officer came aboard. I knew him very well, and I said to him.—

"Doctor, I've got something aboard that perhaps you never saw before."

"What' that?" said he.

"An electric eel," said I.

"Good!" said he; "that's something I've always wanted to see. I want to know just what kind of a shock they can give."

"All right," said I; "you can easily find out for yourself. He is in this water-barrel here, and the water has just been put in fresh so you can see him. All you have got to do is just to wait until he swims up near the surface, and then you can scoop him out with your hand. You needn't be afraid of his biting you."

The doctor said he wasn't afraid of that. He rolled up his sleeve, and as soon as he got a chance he took the eel by the middle and lifted it out of the water. It wasn't a very large one, only eighteen inches long, but pretty stout.

The moment he lifted it he dropped it, grabbed his right shoulder with his left hand and looked aloft.

"What is the matter?" said I.

"Why, I thought something fell on me from the rigging," said he. "I was sure my arm was broken. I never had such a blow in my life."

"It was only the eel," said I. "Now you know what kind of a shock he can give."

Longevity.

Can man reach and pass the age of one hundred years? says the Popular Science Monthly, is a question concerning which physiologists have different opinions. Buffon was the first one in France to raise the question of the extreme limit of human life. In his opinion man, becoming adult at sixteen, ought to live six times that age, or to ninety-six years. Having been called upon to account for the phenomenal ages attributed by the Bible to patriarchs, he risks the following as an explination: "Before the flood the earth was less solid, less compact than it is now. The law of gravitation had acted for only a little time; the productions of the globe had less consistency, and the body of man, being more supple, was more susceptible of extension. Being able to grow for a longer time, it should in consequence live for a longer time than now."

The German Heusler has suggested on the same point that the ancients did not divide time as we do. Previous to the age of Abraham, the year, among some people of the East was only three months, or a season; so that they had a year of spring, one of summer, one of fall, and one of winter. The year was extended so as to consist of eight months after Abraham, and of twelve months after Joseph. Voltaire rejected the longevity assigned to the patriarchs of the Bible, but accepted without question the stories of the great ages attained by some men in India, where he says: "It is not rare to see men of one hundred and twenty years." The eminent French physiologist, Flourens, fixing the complete development of man at twenty years, teaches that he should live four times as long as it takes him to become an adult. According to this author, the moment of a complete development may be recognized by the fact of the junction of the bones with their apophysis. This junction takes place in horses at five years, and the horse does not live beyond twenty-five years; with the ox at four years, and it does not live beyond twenty years; with the cat at eighteen months, and that animal rarely lives over ten years. When it is effected at twenty years, he only exceptionally lives beyond one hundred years. The same physiologist admits, however, that human life may be exceptionally prolonged under certain conditions of comfort, sobriety, freedom from care, regularity of habits, and observance of the rules of hygeine; and he terminates his study of the last point with the, aphorism: "Man kills himself rather than dies."

At Montreal a thief went into the hall of a boarding house, while the boarders were at supper, and gathered up all the hats. He was making his way out, when a boarder a little behind time, came in, and asked him what he was about. "Oh," says the thief, "I'm taking the gentlemen's hats around to Leary's to get smoothed." "Well," replied the boarder, "take my hat, too." "Certainly, sir," said the accommodating thief, and vanished.

Mr. Nathan Appleton, of Boston, as president of the Newport Society for Protection to Animals, publicly stated that hereafter the society will take steps to prevent fox-hunting.

ONLY TWO BOTTLES.

Messrs. Johnson, Holloway & Co., wholesale druggists of Philadelphia, Pa., report that some time ago a gentleman handed them a dollar, with a request to send a good catarrh cure to two army officers in Arizona. Recently the same gentlemen told them that both the officers and the wife of Gen. John C. Fremont, Gov. of Arizona, had been cured of catarrh by the two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm.

Morenci Observer: Mr. Benjamin Frary, formerly a prosperous farmer of Blissfield, but for the last three or four years a resident of this vicinity, died last Saturday from the effects of a cancer on the side of his head, with which he had been afflicted a long time. He was an honest, upright, respected citizen.

Change of Mind.

I declined to insert your advertisement of Hop Bitters last year, because I then thought they might not be promotive of the cause of temperance, but find they are, and a very valuable medicine, myself and wife having been greatly benefited by them, and I take great pleasure in making them known.

The Eyesight of Readers.

A writer calls attention to the danger which readers run of injuring their eyesight by the use of a bad light. He remarks, that engravers, watchmakers, and all others who use their eyes constantly in their work, take extra care to preserve them by getting the best possible light by day, and using the best artificial light by night. The great army of readers are careless, and have, sooner or later, to pay the penalty of their carelessness, by giving up night work entirely, and sometimes reading, except at short intervals, and under the best conditions. All departures from common type, making the matter more difficult for the eyes to take in, increase the danger. The magnitude of the physical labor of reading is not appreciated. A book of five hundred pages, forty lines to the page, and fifty letters to the line, contains one million letters, all of which the eye has to take in, identify and combine each with its neighbor. Yet many a reader will go through such a book in a day. The task is one he would shrink from if he stopped to measure it before hand. The best positions and best lights, clear type, plain inks, with the best paper with yellowish tints, and abundance of space between the lines, afford the best safeguards against harm.

The Doctor's Last Happy Resort.

Evansville, Ind., Jan. 11, 1882.

I recently had a very difficult case of Consumption. I treated it in the most scientific manner possible, but to no effect; patient grew gradually worse. Rather than give up, and as a last resort, I decided, much against my wish, to use a remedy that had cured one of my former patients.—Greatly to my surprise, the patient began to gain, and in a much shorter time than I dared to ever expect, she was completely cured. The name of this remarkable remedy is Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. I now use it altogether in my practice.

Subterranean Cables in France.

Cast-iron pipes are now being made to receive the underground telegraph cable which in a few months will put Paris in direct communication with Marseilles. A hundred and fifty navvies are engaged in this work, which is being prosecuted from both ends along the right bank of the Rhone, and following the main roads. The pipes are laid at a depth of more than a metre and a half, and chambers for facilitating repairs are arranged about every five hundred metres; they are described as resembling large cast-iron caldrons with covers, and having apertures for receiving the ends of the two pipes which they connect. Every hundred metres the pipes are united by cast-iron couplings, which will also permit of inspecting and repairing the cable; and the joint between each pipe is made with an Indian-rubber washer or lead collar. The work is pushed forward with vigor, and it is proposed eventually to connect this cable, which will traverse France from north to south, with the cables of the Mediterranean and Atlantic.—Iron.

TECUMSEH, MICH., OCT. 19, 1882.

But three more weeks remain before election. The campaign has been a very quiet one in this section thus far.

The New York preachers are taking a hand in the political fight in that State with a will, and what is more, they are almost unanimously against the machine, and on the people's side.

EVERY qualified elector must make a personal application to his township clerk to have his name registered on or before the 4th day of November next or he cannot vote at the coming election.

The duty on trace chains and halter chains is 57 per cent. That is, every farmer in the country who uses trace chains and halter chains pays a tax of 57 per cent. to the manufacturer who manufactures them.

There was a political upheaval in West Virginia also, last week. The Wheeling district reversed a heavy Democratic majority and elected a Republican Congressman by 1900 majority. The political bosses are having a hard time of it on both sides this fall.

The Boston Globe gives us a little solid wisdom in these few words: "Collector Robertson says that in all his political experience he never scratched his party ticket, whether the nominee was for a National, State or local position. A man who has spent a lifetime in New York and can say that is a mighty poor man for honest men to follow. And this is true whether the man be a Democrat or Republican.

Some of the party organs are poking fun at Begole's orthography. When the relief committees were quarreling over the distribution of the funds to the sufferers in the burnt districts, Mr. Begole sent the following to one of the relief agents: "Until the differences between the two committees are adjusted and you receive your regular supplies from them, draw on me. Let no one suffer while I have money." Where was Gov. Jerome at that time, and what was he doing for the relief of the sufferers?

Ypsilanti Sentinel: "Thirty-five experienced operatives from Sweden, the first installment of 300, arrived Tuesday to take places at the Harmony Mills, Cohoes, N. Y., of the workmen who were removed during the strike. The mills are running steadily." That is the way it is done. While the tariff monopolists insist on compelling everybody else to buy in the dearest market, they purchase labor in the cheapest. Let the laboring men of the United States demand a protective specific duty of one hundred dollars on every able-bodied man and woman who comes to this country as a common laborer, and five hundred dollars on a skilled mechanic. That would be protecting labor in the same way capital is protected. Such an agitation begun in earnest, would soon show up the question of protection in its true light.

The young Democrats of Adrian come up to the chalk line like men. A large meeting was held at the Central Hotel last Saturday evening, when the following resolutions were passed:

WHEREAS, The nominee of the Republican party for Congress in this district and his partisans have industriously circulated the falacious report throughout this county and district that the young Democracy of the city of Adrian have refused their support to Col. N. B. Eldredge, the Democratic nominee for Congress, and that they were disposed to use their influence against his election; such falacious reports being designed to injure Col. Eldredge, it is hereby

Resolved, That such statements are without foundation and entirely untrue. Further, that we denounce such reports as unmanly and unworthy of credence. Believing that in every sense Col. Eldredge is a man worthy of election to Congress, a true and tried Democrat, and a citizen of unquestionable honesty and integrity, we hereby pledge him our full, hearty and loyal support at the coming election.

WHOLESALE BUSINESS IN DETROIT.

The leading wholesale dealer in books and stationery in the beautiful City of the Straits, or anywhere in the Michigan Peninsulas, by undisputed precedence, is Thordyke Nourse. This young gentleman came from Boston to the Northwest about ten years ago, bringing to the city of his choice an invaluable re-enforcement of the characteristic shrewdness, energy and enterprise of the Hub. He became a member of the then notable firm of E. B. Smith & Co., occupying the spacious premises now used by the American Express Company, at the southwest corner of Griswold and Fort streets. He remained with Messrs. Smith & Co. for about seven years, and upon the dissolution of that house in 1880, assumed and carried on its business, with successive enlargements and increasing prosperity, until this year, when he wisely retired from the retail trade, and devoted his abilities to his growing and more hopeful wholesale interests. For several years, under E. B. Smith & Co., and then Thordyke Nourse, the establishment had been popularly maintained on Woodward avenue, northeast corner of Larned street, where a well-stocked retail store and some of the lighter branches of Mr. Nourse's own business are still conducted. This location, however, was not satisfactory as a permanent place for the broader trade which he contemplated. At this instance, accordingly, the proprietor of the site now occupied (at Nos. 47, 49 and 51 Larned street, southeast corner of Shelby), erected the elegant McMillan building, which fills a worthy place in the recent and noble architecture of the city. In the spring of 1882 Mr. Nourse, whose ideas had been embodied in every feature of the edifice, took the entire lease of it, and now occupies nearly the whole with the various departments of an establishment which has already come to be one of the most marked characteristics of the manufacturing and wholesale interests of Detroit. A considerable panorama would be required even to hint the beauty of the views to be had from parts of it, across the city and the broad river to the dominion of Her Brittanic Majesty, or to indicate its eligible situation for business. It is scarcely more than a biscuit toss from the postoffice, whose site, by the recent decision of the Government authorities, is to remain undisturbed, except by early extension and improvement, for, probably, the next fifty years at least. It is within five minutes' walk of all the principal steamer landings and hotels; is directly upon the Larned street line of horse cars, running to the Central depot, the chief railway station in the city, and is within pistol shot of every other trainway in the place. The famous Woodward avenue is but two blocks distant; Jefferson avenue but one block. Better judgment in the choice of a present and permanent location for such a business could not have been had.

The edifice thus fortunately occupied by Mr. Nourse is six stories high, including the basement story. Entering this, the clatter of busy machinery cheerily greets the visitor, for Mr. Nourse is a printer, binder and publisher, as well as bookseller and stationer. To his presses, in printing rooms and bindery, comes large work from far and near; in one recent case—that of a huge encyclopedia for subscription circulation, across two States and part of another, even from the interior of Iowa, and passing the Chicago printers on the way. For that matter, a well-known Chicago house, having a heavy contract for the production of the Supreme Court reports of Michigan, has all the mechanical work done by Mr. Nourse, and no neater work in all particulars of typography and binding, appears in the law books of any State in the Union or country of the world. His work shops are all constantly engaged in turning out the issues of two of the most popular subscription books in the market, largely by reason of their superior presentations to the eye. A vast deal of occasional and transient work is also turned out of the various branches of the manufacturing department.

Mr. Nourse is likewise himself a publisher of no small productivity. Among the more important works bearing his imprint are the thirteen volumes of the "handy volume Shakespeare," for which there is a steady and increasing demand; the writings of the celebrated Orestes A. Brownson, long editor of the Boston Quarterly Review, prepared by his son, now a resident of Detroit (in press), a new edition of Dr. John Brown's "Rob and His Friends," superbly illustrated with original steel plates, and retailed at the price of five dollars; Webb's "Word Method" and the accompanying apparatus, which have been the means of introducing an improved way of learning to read into many thousands of schools; Smith's Interest Tables; School Registers, in two sizes; and Smith's Class Book.

By all the printed productions of the house the basement story is kept musical with the movement of a fine Campbell four-roller press, a complete Campbell and a Cranston, and several other presses are in motion above and below stairs. Mr. Chas. Kamerhoff is "on deck" in his department, and Mr. H. R. Winn is foreman in the composing room. This is at the other extreme of height, occupying the well-lighted and ventilated uppermost story, to which, as to all the floors, an elevator gives prompt and convenient access. Upon this floor we notice many immense rolls of paper, such as are used by the perfecting presses printing the leading daily journals, which reminds us that Mr. Nourse also carries a heavy business in "news print," furnishing, for example, the entire supply of the Detroit Post and Tribune.

Three of the floors below the composing room, in the west half of the building, are occupied by the bindery, employing about eighty hands, under the competent charge of the veteran bookbinder, Mr. H. T. Cliff. To him the establishment is indebted for valuable improvements, as a simple machine for the removal of superfluous gold leaf after embossing, which is elsewhere done by hand. The bindery has a very full equipment of embossing and other presses, and machines for ruling, numbering, folding and other purposes. The highest of the floors given to the bindery is almost exclusively devoted to the manufacture of blank-Books, which is one of the specialties of the business, and for which it has high reputation. Some of the book bindings in the rooms below are quite unique, as that of "The Successful Housekeeper," in a beautiful pattern of oil cloth, peculiarly adapted to meet the dangers of the kitchen and pantry.

The most attractive rooms of all, however, are naturally the sales or sample departments, occupying the ground floor. Immediately at the corner of Shelby and Larned streets is the spacious room devoted to books and the finer articles of stationery, which appear in infinite variety of beauty and excellence. Miscellaneous books, photograph, autograph, scrap, card and picture albums, papeteries, writing fluids and inkstands, blank-books, folded papers, etc., etc., etc.—in brief, every article properly carried in the wholesale business are shown here in wondrous and bewildering variety. An ingenious addition of galleries has added greatly to the storage capacity of the rooms. The second one is devoted more closely to the specialties of Mr. Nourse's trade—to stationery, as represented by flat papers, envelopes, blank-books, inks, etc., vast piles of which cover the floor and line the galleries. A well equipped accountants' office, with immense but elegant safe, is at the street end of this room, and it forms a very pleasant office, which is occupied by Mr. E. S. Baker and his several assistants. Between the rooms, but opening out of the first, is Mr. Nourse's private office, handsomely and tastefully furnished; upon the other side of the room is the desk of Mr. C. M. Gilbert, superintendent of this department. On the east side of the building, in stories above the stationery and accountants' room, the boxes, sheives and other carpenter's work required in the business, are manufactured. The whole forms a hive of busy and well directed industry, such as is rarely seen in any city of our western world.

THE FLOWER [illegible] ORE.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was published in this paper recently, and has been the subject of much conversation both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester, but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper a few days since which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal inquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview occurred:

"That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did, and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day, and was ravenous the next; felt dull indefinite pains, and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's disease which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement, Doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it, Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of so-called diseases are torturing people to-day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a Hydra-headed monster, and the slightest symptom should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject, and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, at the University. If you want facts, there are any quantity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symptoms, and that there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter bade him good day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly, and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop Haven and others. This is terrible, and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It should be plain to everyone that something must be done to check this increase, or there is no knowing where this may end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to my notice. A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis, and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to show the contrast between healthy and unhealthy fluids, he had provided a vial the contents of which were drawn from his own person. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him, and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys,' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own, and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own, and very often none at all. Usually no two people have the same symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I know what I am talking about, for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful, is it not?"

"A very prominent case, but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from the experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience. What was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope, and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'There goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this caused you to manufacture it?"

"No, it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities, saw physicians prescribing and using it, and I therefore determined, as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach, and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store, and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements, and next paid a visit to Dr. S. A. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analysts, courteously answered the questions that were propounded him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner would recover?"

"No, sir. I did not think it possible. It was seldom, indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it and upon critical examination find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused, and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question, and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing, and that it can be cured.

AMBROSE HUNTER, of Adrian—the man who agreed to walk at the fourth of July celebration in Tecumseh and didn't—proposes now to try a race with Scipio, sir-named Stewart, who lives in Deerfield.

THERE will be a meeting of the friends of temperance at the Reform Club rooms Sunday afternoon, three o'clock—the second of the Sunday afternoon meetings. Let their be a good attendance.

L. L. BATES, wife and daughter, take their departure from Tecumseh to-day, with the intention of making their home in New York state. We are sorry to have them go, and hope they will soon return.

WE owe our Ridgeway correspondent and Miss Hall an apology for a silly typographical blunder in our Ridgeway letter last week. The changing of a single vowel in a single word will sometimes raise h—l.

MR. C. A. THATCHER, of Tiffin, O. is in town delivering some very fine ink and crayon portraits. Our people are well pleased with the work and new orders are pouring in upon him. Mr. Thatcher expects to remain in town until Tuesday next.

ALL voters of Tecumseh and vicinity who are interested in the thorough discussion of the tariff question are cordially invited to attend a meeting at Merritt & Frazer's office, on Tuesday evening next, at 7:30. At that place and time there will be organized a Free Trade league.

GEO. WILSON purchased the Burch steam mill property yesterday, and takes possession to-day. His brother, John, will run the mill, and George will hold his position with Mr. Hayden as heretofore. Mr. Wilson will make improvements on the property, and we wish him all success with his enterprise.

LAST evening Co. "C", M. S. T., held an election of officers with the following result:

Captain—A. D. Lawrence.
1st Lieut.—James McKinney.
2nd Lieut.—F. B. Wood.
Orderly—A. E. Kennedy.

For some time past the boys have been putting in good work drilling, and now do the fancy movements nicely. We saw them drill last night and our town can well be proud of so excellent a company.

MR. H. H. WOOD has returned to town after an absence of 13 years and expects to locate here in the millwright business.

LEROY C. BLOOD, of Lansing, drove over last week with his horse and buggy, and has been feasting on Tecumseh air and potatoes for a few days.—He returns home to-day.

The Adrian Record says "a Raisin farmer has on hand 1,000 watermelons which he is desirous of disposing of." He oughtn't to be Raisin' so much of a crop, but give us ample time and we can get away with 600 or 700. Send 'em in.

REUBEN THAYER, of Deerfield, has traced some honey recently stolen from him to the residence of a Monroe county man named Hall. Complaint has been made, and the case is in the hands of the Monroe county prosecuting attorney.

Co. C, Michigan State troops, held a drill and election for civic officers on Friday evening, Oct. 6th, which resulted in the selection of the following to act for the coming year:

President—Dr. R. B. House.
Vice Pres.—W. W. Frasier.
Sec.—Fred. B. Wood.
Treas.—A. E. Kennedy.
Finance Com.—Ed. McKinney, J. McKinney, Wm. Moir.

FRANKLIN D. TEACHOUT, the Union candidate for county treasurer was in town last Saturday and favored the HERALD office with a short call. Mr. Teachout spent most of the day in Tecumseh and while here met many of his political friends, and it is only justice to say that he made a most favorable impression. Although his acquaintance in this portion of the county is somewhat limited, still his good name and reputation have preceded him, and the Union men in this section consider that his nomination is an admirable one. He is one of the rising young farmers of Rome, and stands very high in the esteem of his own neighbors and townsmen.

A REPLY.

The meteoric effusion which appeared in last week's issue of the HERALD would have accomplished some actual benefit, possibly, had it been ushered into existence prior to the organization of the C. L. S. C. of Tecumseh. The announcement a few weeks since, that Rev. R. S. Pardington would organize a Chautauqua class, was sufficient of itself to excite pleasant anticipation among many intelligent minds, as the community has already learned, both by observation and experience, that whatever the reverend gentleman undertakes is accomplished with ultimate satisfaction and success, and the impression received by those parties referred to was that Mr. Pardington would personally conduct the class, the nature of which would approximate a literary reading club. Those who were present at the organization meeting are authority for the knowledge that the original arrangements at that time were to have a general meeting once a month, and in the mean time, the members could recite in limited circles—family or otherwise—to whom and when they pleased. That was never designed by the illustrous founder or his auxiliaries, any other method, may be unquestionably true and eminently proper. Nevertheless, it is a significant fact that an acquaintance with the course provided revealed unexpected methods and imparted disappointments to a number of persons who might be appropriately termed "ordinary literary enthusiasts." Of course, the expression is subject to breadth of opinion, as possibly what to me would be an ordinary literary enthusiast, would appear to my distinguished critic a prodigy in the world of letters. As to the fees received by the founder of the C. L. S. C., it is safe to venture the assertion that no one but his private secretary could designate the exact amount, notwithstanding it is exclusively his own business, as also his privilege to dip fame and fortune from the same silvery fount, if he possess the inclination and ability.

There are two things which innovators of newspaper articles would do well to remember. The one—that news items are written for the time being, and that the current subjects discussed are liable to encounter unlimited revolutions before the article even appears in print. The other—that newspaper correspondents are reporters, are detailed for other purposes than mere vehicles for elegant adulation or elaborate compliment, and are expected to present the truth void of gloss or varnish.

PEARL DIAMOND.

MATRIMONIAL.

Mr. J. Raynor Lilley was married in Buffalo, N. Y., on the 12th inst. The ceremony was a brilliant one, and was attended by a large number of guests. We clip this account of the affair from the Buffalo Courier. We unite with Mr. Lilley's numerous Tecumseh friends in extending our congratulations:

Married, at the Church of the Ascension, on Thursday evening, October 12th, at six o'clock, Jeanie Elizabeth, daughter of Judge Charles Daniels, of the Supreme Court, to James Raynor Lilley, of Cleveland, Ohio. Never has this lovely little Protestant Episcopal church presented a more poetic aspect. The twinkling lights high up in space revealed a host of witnesses in bright array, who filled every pew to overflowing. Swaying palms and tall tropical grasses, mingled with flowers of every hue, transformed the chancel into a midsummer bower. The font was banked with blooming plants, and each of the windows was beautified with gay geraniums and drooping leafage. A pair of high floral gates barred off a portion of the church for the more intimate friends and kinsfolk, who were beguiled before the coming of the bride and bridegroom by the overture from "Carmen." A canopy connected the adjoining Daniels residence with the church, and through this covered way came the bridal party into the church, to be met at the altar by the officiating clergyman, the Rev. J. M. Henderson, and the best man, Mr. E. T. Le Baron, of Toledo. The ushers were Messrs. Charles B. Wheeler, Andrew J. Rich, Sidney M. Sweet of Buffalo, and Charles E. Lewis, of Cincinnati; the bridesmaids, Miss Ella Daniels of Toledo, and Miss Sweet, Miss Hauenstein and Miss Ella Jewett of Buffalo. These were grouped about the central figures at the altar, the bride entering on her father's arm, and Mrs. Charles Daniels with Mr. Charles H. Daniels. Nothing has added more to the picturesque effectiveness of the wedding tableau than this autumn's bright fancy of colored attire for the attendant maids, who on this occasion were robed in pink, blue and cream-colored surah with demi-trains. They carried old-fashioned nosegays of roses, tied loosely with ribbon. The bridal robe was a rich white court train, finished with a full rushing and front breadth, trimmed with pearl embroidery and duchesse lace. The corsage was cut square and edged with duchesse, as were the elbow sleeves. The bride's jewels were diamonds, and her flowers natural rosebuds. The usual veil of tulle fell in a soft mass about her. Mrs. Daniels wore a pearl colored silk with silver garniture, point lace and diamonds. At the conclusion of the ceremony, to which there was a low organ accompaniment, the familiar chords of the wedding march sounded as the bridal party retraced their steps to the Daniels residence, where, as they entered, Poppenberg's orchestra greeted them with the same refrain. The reception was most elegant in the scope of its appointments. Chandeliers, stairways and pictures were trimmed with smilax, and myriads of roses and lilies lent their fleeting fragrance to the scene. The verandas, which were enclosed, served as promenades, and the wedding supper was set forth by Teale and Thompson in a canvas pavilion decorated with roses, plants and trailing vines, while a thickly fruited pear tree which chanced to be enclosed was made musical by canary birds. Judge and Mrs. Daniels received several hundred of their friends during the evening, and congratulatory telegrams were addressed to the young couple by all of the Judge's confreres upon the Supreme Bench. An upper apartment was especially reserved for the display of the wedding gifts, which in number and elegance exceed description, consisting of costly silver, glass, full sets of china, bric-a-brac and bronzes. Among them was an elegant Jules Jurgensen gold watch and chain from James A. Raynor, of N.Y., to James Raynor Lilley. When the hours of the reception proper were numbered, Mr. and Mrs. Lilley disappeared to depart upon their wedding journey, at the conclusion of which they will take up their residence in Cleveland, where the bridegroom has lately erected a pretty house. Among the distinguished guests present from elsewhere, were: Mr. and Mrs. Lucius Lilley, father and mother of the groom, from Tecumseh, Mich.; Mrs. Lester P. Tribou, of Tecumseh, sister of the groom; Miss Ella Lewis of Cincinnati, Mr and Mrs. Thomas Daniels and Miss Mabel Daniels of Toledo, Mr. Howard Smith of Toledo, Mr. Noah Swayne of Toledo, son of Justice Swayne of Washington; Hamilton Ward, of Allegany county, Judge and Mrs. Barker of Fredonia, and many others.

THE second convention of the Lenawee County Sunday School Union will be held at Hudson next week on Tuesday and Wednesday, Oct. 24th and 25th. Revs. Conley and Pardington, Dr. L. G. North and other Tecumseh people will attend. Dr. North is secretary of the Union.

COUNTY CLIPPINGS.

A load of new corn sold at Adrian for 42 cents per bushel.

The cider and sorghum mills thro'out the county are making the "juice fly" these days.

The Adrian Packing Company have "put up" over 200,000 cans of tomatoes this season.

There is to be a pearl button manufactory at Adrian soon, which will turn out about 10,000 buttons per week.

Dr. W. B. Heartwell, a homeopathic physician, from Des Moines, Iowa, has lately located in Clinton to practice his profession.

S. G. Blinn has reconsidered his intention of moving his stave mill from Deerfield to Canada, and now thinks of taking it to Ithaca, in Gratiot county.

Rufus Baker, of Fairfield, is reflecting on the question of converting his cheese factory into a creamery for the manufacture of butter, another season.

Blissfield Advance: Col. Eldredge thinks he will carry the county, and expects to be elected; John K. Boies will take his seat in Congress, just the same, if he lives.

L. F. Wheeler, the talented scenic artist, is to give his "Illuminated Rambles in Foreign Lands," at Hudson on the 23d, 24th and 25th of this month. Those who fail to attend will miss a rare treat.

Morenci Observer: In the contest for field crops at our fair our townsman, S. T. Snow, of the Exchange, "carried off the cake," having raised on his little farm the best crops reported in this part of the county. In the way of potatoes he "raised" 227 bushels on half an acre.

Adrian Record: Geo. Odell a German vagrant, was willingly jerked before Judge Turner yesterday, charged with being a vagrant. He evidently desired to be sent up for six months, and wanted his honor to be sure and not make it any less. The Judge did not make it any less. That man was not anxious to vote this fall.

Clinton News: P. C. Snell, the section foreman through whose carelessness the accident to the freight train occurred between here and Tecumseh a couple of weeks ago, has been reinstated to his position by the company. Snell is said to be an exceptionally good man and has probably learned a lesson which will be of value to him and the company in the future.

Deerfield Record: Two of our well known and skillful mechanics are talking of building a stave mill in this village. There is no doubt but it would be a paying investment, as there is said to be timber in this vicinity sufficient to stock a mill for several years, and a market for the manufactured goods could be found readily.—We hope the project will end in something more substantial than talk.

Hudson Post: Saturday afternoon a footpad halted Matthew Berlin a young man of Western Medina, on his way home from Morenci, and presenting a revolver demanded his money. Berlin, who was defenseless, handed over his pocket book, containing $25, with a strong verbal protest, but it was no go, the robber took the cash and returned the pocket book. A force was organized to scour the swamp near Mr. Cox's, where he took refuge, and young Cox halted a man who he supposed belonged to his party, but the fellow replied with a shot and disappeared.

Morenci Observer: The wedding of Miss May Billin, of Deerfield, a former popular teacher in our Union schools, and Rev. Mr. Gilchriese, at present stationed at St. Charles, Mich., took place at the home of the bride, last Wednesday evening. There were about seventy-five guests present from Morenci, Adrian, Tecumseh, Manchester, Detroit and other points.—The floral decorations were profuse and elaborate, and presents numerous and costly. Rev. Dr. Poole, of Detroit, assisted by two other clergymen attended to the ceremonies of the occasion. The newly wedded pair started the same evening for a wedding tour to Toronto.

Hudson Gazette: We don't remember that Hudson was ever the locale of a disastrous R. R. smash-up until Thursday morning. At about 4 o'clock the west bound freight, which was standing on the main track, below Lane street, was run into by the freight from the west, with serious consequences to engines and cars—but luckily nobody was injured. The train from the west should have stopped at the water tank, when the other would have taken the side-track; but owing to the heavy grade or some neglect it ran by, with the result chronicled. The two engines were as closely locked as the Siamese twins, and both badly damaged. Most of the draw-bars on the moving train were broken, so the cars had to be coupled with chains. None of the stock in this long train appeared to be injured however. Three freight cars of the other train were badly smashed—almost converted into kindling.

CALLENDER'S Minstrels are coming.

Mrs. Kate Alkins, a wealthy lady of Pittsburg, Pa., writes: "Rich food, and high living, night parties, fashionable dressing and the general frivolity of high life, had been affecting my health quite seriously. I commenced using Brown's Iron Bitters, and now I am as lively as a young girl, and excel them all in endurance. It is more refreshing than champagne, and its strengthening effects are lasting.

DIED.

SMITH.—October 6th, 1882 at the residence of her mother, J. B. McCollum, in the township of Clinton, Mrs. Josephine E. McCollum Smith, wife of John B. Smith.

Less than a year of married life was permitted her with her bereaved companion. She leaves a babe three weeks old. Her illness was severe and painful, resisting all medical aid and loving care. She was an estimable lady—bearing her sickness without a murmur, and expressing herself as fully resigned to the last. She was greatly beloved. The funeral was held on Sunday, October 8th. An immense number gathered at the services. Rev. R. S Pardington delivered an appropriate address. The singing was under the direction of Dr. R. B. House. A large number gathered in the Tecumseh cemetery on the arrival of the procession to show their affection for the departed, and to sympathize with the afflicted. P.

The stoker of the engine was on his last journey; he now intended to remain in Paris, his dearly-beloved Paris. Leroy, the stoker, was not old; thirty years at the outside; tall, with bright eyes, and something decided and haughty in his bearing. Over his open forehead fell a lock of thick black hair; courage and audacity sparkled in his eyes. A full dark moustache jealously concealed his red lips and snow-white teeth; his face was marked with certain features which bespoke pride, with a shade of imperiousness. He was dressed in blue linen trowsers and blouse, which articles of attire were held together by means of a broad leather belt. On his head he wore a broad-brimmed hat.

With a joyous heart he went on feeding the black monster with fuel, which was eagerly consumed by the devouring element. Leroy's sharp gaze glances up the line, when all at once he sees there, in the midst of the solitary plain over which the train is passing, at a distance of about five hundred yards, a human figure stretched at full length across the metals. What was to be done? To stop? impossible! (This was before the invention of the vacuum brake.)

"Do you see that creature lying across the rails, Rollin?" he hurriedly asked the driver.

"Yes!"

"Shall we reverse the steam?"

"On no account; it would shiver us all to pieces."

"We shall have to do it, or else that person's fate is sealed!" exclaimed Leroy.

"And I say it won't do," replied Rollin, decisively; "we should be staking the lives of several of the passengers in our train in the attempt to save that one."

Leroy gazed forward in despair. The train rushed nearer to its victim. The poor creature was lost! Then suddenly the stoker's eyes fell upon the signal cords. Quick as lightning he fastened them round his body.

"Now summon all the strength you have got, take firm hold of the cords, and follow me!" cried Leroy to the engine-driver; and quickly, in less time than it takes to relate it, he creeps along the foot-plate which runs by the side of the boiler, gets in front of the engine, steps down on a projecting bar, and then holding fast by his legs to one of the buffers, he hangs suspended, his head downward, his arms stretched forward and his body held in position by the rope, which the driver has meanwhile passed round the funnel.

At that moment—another revolution of the wheels, and it had been too late—just as the engine was about to crush its human victim Leroy seized the body, snatched it upward, and lifted the burden a few inches above the rails. The engine-driver then slowly dragged him up, and in few moments later he stood with his capture in the space which divides the engine from the tender.

Leroy held in his arms a blooming, elegantly-dressed young damsel about eighteen summers, whom, as by a miracle, he had rescued from certain destruction. Long fair hair fell in wavy tresses over her closed eyes, over her breast and shoulders. Sorrow and anxiety were depicted on her countenance. The stoker carefully laid down his burden, a shrill whistle, and soon afterward the train rolled into the station.

On the following day people read in the Paris morning papers the bold, foolhardy exploit of the stoker. And a few weeks later there appeared in the Marseillaise an announcement of the betrothal of Louise Martin, the daughter of Martin, the banker, to Leroy.

How the Story Grew.

The following story about children's gossip has a lesson for people of larger growth.

As Kittie Coleman and Maggie Weir were going to school one morning, Kittie said, "I was over to Uncle Fred's last Saturday, and came near staying too late. We had such fun I did not notice how near the sun was to setting, and I was very much afraid I would meet a tramp."

"Did you meet any one?" inquired Maggie.

"No one but Johnnie Gates; he was coming down the hill, whistling, and with a great big watermelon under his arm. I was scared at first, but when I saw who it was, I got over it."

At recess Maggie said to Mary Ford, "Kittie told me she saw Johnnie Gates carrying a big watermelon home Saturday evening. Wonder where he got it, and what he was going to do with it?" Before school called Mary whispered to Sallie Bates, "Johnnie Gates was seen carrying a great big watermelon Saturday evening. I wonder if he got it honestly?"

"Mr. Hart's melon patch was robbed about that time; maybe that's where it came from," answered Sallie.

At noon Sallie told Susan and Jennie, "I know something and I'll tell you, if you won't breathe it to a soul."

"Oh, no, we won't," cried both girls in one breath; "what is it?"

"Why, Johnnie Gates robbed Mr. Hart's melon patch one night last week."

"Oh dear, isn't that awful?" exclaimed Susie.

"I always thought that Johnnie was not so much better than the rest of us, for all he made believe he was so honest," said Jennie.

"He couldn't have done it alone," Sallie said.

Whereupon Jennie hastened to a group of school children who were in the house and told them, "Johnnie Gates and a lot of other boys had robbed Mr. Hart's melon patch and destroyed all they could not carry away."

Though vinegar is often sour and disagreeable, it was never known to go back on its mother.

A Marblehead Dog.

As evening came it grew cooler. The breeze came off the water as the sun went down, and we concluded to put our coats on. We quietly slid into the shanty and started up the steep, narrow, and rickety stairs. At the top we found the dog. Furthermore, we found that he objected to our coming up. In the dim light we could see blood in his eye. We went back without our coat. Presently the chief of the fire department went in to get his coat, and he came back without it, too. But he said nothing, and several others tried the experiment, and came back the same way. But finally one gentleman couldn't stand it, and spoke of the dog. That broke the ice, and we decided to get the dog down. We threw things at him and tried to scare him away, but he only growled savagely. Then one of the party stood at the foot of the stairs and lied like a pirate, saying: "Nice dog! Good old fellow! Come, Towser!" But Towser was proof against flattery. It had grown quite dark, and the breeze was coming along brisk, and everybody was shivering. Meat was offered to the dog to get him away, but he wouldn't have it. Things began to be blue! The handsome yachtsman asked if somebody present couldn't swear? The chief of the department, being a fireman, of course didn't know a profane word, and neither did any of the rest of us. The doctor said if anybody would go up and throw the dog out he'd cauterize the bites free of charge, and our friend of the legal fraternity said he'd give his services in a suit for damages. But nobody volunteered. The very heavy gentleman said if he could get on the roof and drop through on the dog he could break the animal's back, but before saying this he took care to observe that there was no way to get on the roof. There was only one thing to do, and we did it. We sent half a mile to get the dog's owner. And while we waited for him we sat and shivered and chattered our teeth, and told each other it was funny, and inwardly thought of things that wouldn't look well in print. And we treated the owner of the dog very politely till he had sent the dog home and we had got our coats. Then if we didn't tell him what we thought of the brute, no matter.

The Musket's Persuasiveness.

General Steedman tells a good story which is applicable to the manner in which the aristocratic Sixtieth Rifles recently skipped out in front of Ramleh, and gave everything up to the Egyptians. While near Nashville the general had a negro regiment on the picket line, and a bright young mulatto sergeant in command of a post got the drop on a rebel post and captured the whole outfit. The rebels were a crowd of high-stepping young Virginians, and some of them were badly wrought up by the idea of having to surrender to a "lot of niggers." General Steedman took their commander, a fine young fellow, into his tent, extended some little courtesies to him, and in the course of the conversation said. "It was a little tough, Lieutenant, to be taken in by colored soldiers, but war has strange experiences." "Well, General," said the other, setting down his glass, "I've been in the army now nearly four years, and if I've learned any thing it has been a profound respect for the musket. When the muzzle is shoved into my face, I don't usually ask any questions as to who's got hold of the breech."

General Sherman tells nearly as good a story, in his book. He was standing on the sidewalk in St. Louis when General Lyon went out with his men to attack the secessionists at Camp Jackson. A young lady of General Sherman's acquaintance—daughter of one of the most aristocratic families in the city—was standing on a stoop near by, wringing her hands and crying. She said her brothers, cousins, and a number of acquaintances, were in camp Jackson, and she was certain they would all be killed, for they were proud, high-spirited men, belonging to the best families in the city, and they would die before they would yield. General Sherman tried to console her by saying that he had noticed that sons of first-class families were usually not any more willing to die than other people. He continued his walk, and in a little while met General Lyon returned with the entire force at Camp Jackson, which had surrendered without firing a gun. He hastened back to comfort the young lady with news of her kinsmen's safety, but after she heard it she slammed the door in his face.

An Awkward Sign.

A spell ago a man started in the ready-made clothing business, on Seventh street, and called his place a "Misfit parlor." It was an odd name and puzzled people a good deal at first. Some thought it was a place where fits were cured, and a person subject to one would miss fits if he entered the parlor. When the Assessor called there last spring he asked if Miss Fit was in. Another time a woman dropped in with her little girl and wanted to buy a suit for her. "We have suits for boys," said the urbane proprietor, "but none for little girls." "Can't you fit a Miss?" asked the woman, impatiently. "No, we cannot." "Then," said the irate woman, "why do you advertise miss fits? You had better take in your sign."—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

Veneers of Paper.

Paper veneers have come to be an important article of manufacture, the extension of the industry being largely due to the new and wonderful processes of cutting. The mechanism cuts the logs to lengths of twelve feet, which are then halved or quartered, and bolted securely on a revolving iron table. As the table and wood revolve the surface of the latter comes in contact with a knife twelve feet long, ground to a razor edge and perfectly true, secured on a rigid iron frame—the entire cutting apparatus weighing about thirty tons. The veneers roll off in sheets at every revolution, of from one-ninetieth to one one-hundred-and-seventy-fifth of an inch in thickness, and of the width and length of the log. There is not the slightest vibration of either the knife or log, as the sheet of wood in such case would be either broken or take up the spring like a wedge. The sheets are backed with paper.

A New York policeman who clubbed a pedestrian sixteen years ago was not forgotten. The two met in Oregon the other day, and this time the tables were turned and the policeman was left for dead.

Fortunes for Farmers and Mechanics.

Thousands of dollars can be saved by using proper judgment in taking care of the health of yourself and family. If you are Billious, have sallow complexion, poor appetite, low and depressed spirits, and generally debilitated, do not delay a moment, but go at once and procure a bottle of those wonderful Electric Bitters, which never fail to cure, and that for the trifling sum of fifty cents.—Tribune.—C. How Charles Reade Writes a Play.

One set of Charles Reade's scrap books are filled with paragraphs about women and are labeled Femina Vera. Others are devoted to reports of curious police cases under the heading of Curialia, or man as revealed in courts of law. Several ponderous tomes labeled Negri Loci contain the report of dark deeds perpetrated in public institutions. When Mr. Reade writes a play, he does his work in a most systematic manner. His original MS. is handed to his secretary, who makes a careful copy. This is revised by the author and a fresh copy is made, with instructions for prompter and stage manager. Then the author has an interview with a first-class artist, and a set of sketches are made. These drawings are sent to the wood engraver or lithographer for large posters or window cards. Appropriate music is written by a competent musician, and several complete sets of the score are arranged.

"Hello, Cousin Josiah."

A good Connecticut deacon, Josiah Smith, having heard all about the New York confidence men who address strangers in the street and pretend to know their names and all about them, knocked one of them down with his carpet-bag, containing his Bible and heavy boots, in the Grand Central depot the other day for saying, "Hello, Cousin Josiah." "You can't fool me," said the old man, as he floored this young one in the skin-tight pants and toothpick shoes. But when it turned out that the young man really was his cousin, who had been sent to the depot to meet him, the old farmer was not so sure that you "can't fool him."

KIDNEY & LIVER CURE

Disease is an effect, not a cause. Its origin is within; its manifestations without. Hence, to cure the disease the cause must be removed, and in no other way can a cure ever be effected. WARNER'S SAFE KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE is established on just this principal. It realizes that of all diseases arise from deranged kidneys and liver, and it strikes at once at the root of the difficulty. The elements of which it is composed act directly upon these great organs, both as a food and a restorer, and by placing them in a healthy condition, drive disease and pain from the system.

95 Per Cent.

For the innumerable troubles caused by unhealthy Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs; for the distressing Disorders of Women; for Malaria, and for physical derangements generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

MR. WM. WESTFALL,

Of Duchess Co., N. Y., 80 Years of Age Suffered Continually for Many Years From Stone in the Bladder.

Great age and painful disease are a sad combination. Yet Mr. William Westfall, formerly of Rock City, Duchess Co., N. Y., now of Washington Hollow, in the same county, came to the office of Dr. David Kennedy, the eminent Physician and Surgeon of Rondout, N. Y., some time since, in a condition to excite the sympathy of the most cold-blooded and hard-hearted person in the world. We say he came—he was, rather, carried to the Doctor's office, for he was totally helpless, and bore the weight of 80 years besides. He had suffered long from Retention of Urine, and had all the symptoms of an aggravated case of calculus formations in the bladder. The usual instrumental examination revealed the presence in the bladder of a urinary calculus of uncommon size. Dr. Kennedy frankly told Mr. Westfall that, owing to his age and debility, an operation was out of the question, but that he could, by the prescription of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," together with local treatment, make him comfortable, and leave him to live out all his days. The outcome of this was that the patient enjoys good health to this day.

The Reasons Why.

Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" is being extensively used by our people are as follows: It is a combination of vegetable alteratives. It is pleasant to the taste, adapted to both sexes and all ages, is effective in affording immediate relief in all cases of Kidney troubles, Liver Complaints, Constipation of the Bowels, and derangements peculiar to women. At the same time purifies the blood, thus giving tone and strength to the system debilitated by disease or age. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," for sale by all druggists.

A DAILY EVENT!

The Receipt of Letters Like the Following:

COMMONWEALTH, Wis., July 20, '82.

DR. PENGELLY:—Please send me one more of your Zoa-Phora. The one bottle I have used has done wonders. I have been under doctors' care more or less for five years. Have suffered from Inflammation, Ulceration and Prolapsus Uteri, weakness and heavy head, in fact felt worn out, not able to sit up. I am feeling just splendid now, and shall continue Zoa-Phora until cured. MRS. N. W. HAMAR.

From Mrs. John Spitler, No. 28 Wilt St., Fort Wayne, Ind.:

I have been suffering for over 16 years with spasmodic pain in my head, and general nervous debility. I had a severe attack of pain in my head two weeks ago, caused by weakness and nervous exhaustion. I really thought I should die. We had Zoa-Phora in the house, and my husband said we would test it to the uttermost. He gave it to me, according to directions, for several cases, and in less than two hours, to his great satisfaction, I had what he called immediate relief, and felt like going to sleep. I advise all ladies who suffer with nervous or sick headache, or any form of female weakness, to use your Zoa-Phora, for there is no medicine to compare with it.

May 15th, 1882.

JERSEYVILLE, Ill., April 25, '82.

DR. PENGELLY—Dear Sir:—I am more than pleased with the effects of your Zoa-Phora in our daughter's case. I am surprised to see how she has improved. She is gaining in weight and color; her nerves are steady, and the distress she suffered in her chest is entirely all gone. I firmly believe that Zoa-Phora is all that saved her. I am willing you should use my letter, for I am not afraid to tell what a wonderful cure your medicine is, and I would like all who suffer to try it.

Yours Respectfully,
MRS. SARAH RANDOLPH.

I shall always remember gratefully the good health your medicine has brought my daughter.

Bill Arp on Nature and Superstitions.

There are some curious things about Indian corn, and one is where do the red ears and the speckled ears come from when you don't plant any but white corn; and another is, why don't we find an ear with an odd number of rows on it? You can find a four-leaf clover, but I have never found the odd row on an ear of corn yet. It is always fourteen, or sixteen, or twenty, or some even number, and I would like to understand what corn knows about mathematics, and what objection nature has to odd numbers. But nature is full of mysteries. I was looking at some honeycomb the other day, and wondered how it could be made so true and uniform and perfect even under a microscope, and yet be all made in the dark. And I would like to know how the lightning bug kindles the fire so suddenly, and I've noticed that there is not only light in it to show him how to travel, but there is power in it that pushes him forward and always upward. He rises as he lights, which is a good emblem. When a man sets himself up as a preacher, or a teacher, or a statesman, and undertakes to throw light around upon the people he ought to so live by precept and example that he would rise higher and higher as he luminated. And right before me in front of the piazza are two vines climbing a cane—one a madeira and the other a jessamine—and they cross each other at every round climbing in opposite directions, and I have tried to make 'em reverse, but they won't. You may tie one with a string, but it will squirm and twist out of it and go according to its nature. This weather is good for some things. I never saw as fine a prospect for turnip and sweet potatoes, and then the flowers keep on blooming, and I don't have to water 'em every day like I did last summer. But these dog-days are very unpopular, for they say that fresh meat won't keep, and milk turns sour, and children have boils, grown folks have headache, and mosquitoes sing around and snakes perambulate. They say that dog-days begin when the dog-star rises with the sun and lasts about a month, and the ancients who worshipped the stars believed that when the dog-star and the sun got so close together they went to fussing and the malignant influence of their quarrel was felt all over the universe. This superstition has been handed down to us from the generations who have gone before, and it shows how long a superstition will hang on to our nature.

It is like seeing the new moon over the left shoulder, or through the brush of a tree, or like beginning a journey, or to make a new garment on Friday. It is astonishing how we let these senseless superstitions take hold of us, even when we don't believe in them at all. I stayed over night once with a man of more than ordinary sense—a strong-minded, well-balanced man—and when I asked him why the carpenter who built his new house didn't coil up that hole overhead he said he wouldn't let him, for it was bad luck to finish a house, and that plank was left off on purpose; and when that man forgot anything and went back after it he always made a cross mark on the ground and spat in it before he turned round.

There is a clever old woman living near us who makes lye soap for my wife and she makes it by the moon, and declares most solemnly she can't make good soap any other way. And Green Foster told me that if a man had a big lot of children and wanted his hog meat to make a heap of gravy he must kill his pork in the dark of the moon, for then it would shrink and juice away; but if he wanted it to swell up and make a big show he must kill it while the moon was on the increase. I'm sorry I didn't know that when I was raising my flock, for they were powerful fond of gravy, and it was a trouble sometimes to get enough for 'em without a great sacrifice of meat.—Atlanta Constitution.

Riches in New York.

And, by the way, do you notice how surely though gradually we are drifting here into two classes—the rich and the poor? says Joe Howard in the Philadelphia Times. Ten years hence there will be no middle class. In New York you could, a few years back, count the millionaires on your fingers. You can't do it now. I can name a hundred men and women here worth a million each. When I was a boy a man with $100,000 clear was rich. What is he now? That means but $4,000 a year, and who can live in any sort of shape on that? There may be a few clergymen here and there who can make both ends meet on that insignificant figure, but bless my soul and buttons—— However, what I wish to get at and emphasize is this: Our great cities are loud with riches. On the great avenues of New York there are men to whom $100,000 is but a bagatelle. I can take you to the streets where there are blocks upon blocks of houses in which no man can live on less than $15,000 to $20,000 a year. Hundreds of men spend $10,000 a year who are not worth 10 cents besides. In other words they spend all they make. What of it? Much. The rich grow richer here and the poor poorer. Culture, education and refinement do not necessarily accompany riches. I met half an hour ago in the Astor House a sturdy fellow—a German Jew—who twenty years ago kept a humble clothing store in Sacramento with his brother. To-day they are as well known on Wall street as the Times is in Philadelphia. They managed to be in the Pacific Railway ring, made millions, and now serve as bankers and brokers in Gotham. They are rich and vulgar, common as pigs. They are insolent and upstarty with people who don't know them. They have a box in the Academy of Music, and attend first family receptions. I met them both—not their wives or families—in the magnificent palace of a millionaire heir a few weeks ago. Swell? Bless you, I feared they would burst. Our railroad kings are phenomenal in wealth. There are so many of them that to be one is not to be singular. But in the extent and amplitude of their possessions they are unique and amazing. There are sections of New York where an annual income of $450 would make its owner a curiosity, and there are others where an annual expenditure of $50,000 to $100,000 is nothing out of the usual rut. This being conceded, am I right or am I wrong? Are we drifting into two great currents—rich and poor—or not?

China is something of a coun

the world. Some of them are five thou and years old; the longest was dug six hundred years ago, and is twice as long as the Erie canal. That Titanic wall of more than one hundred years B. C.

fifteen hundred miles long, and pr

Inventor Edison tells a reporter that he does not believe a submarine telephone comes within the region of possibilities. He says: "The present condition of the art will not permit sound to be audible by submarine or underground conveyance more than a few miles. It is all they can do to talk across the English Channel, and that with the very best instrument yet constructed."

The English Educational Department has just published a circular in which it lays down the principle in instruction that, as a general rule, but especially in the lower standards, the examiner should be careful rather to ask for the meaning of short sentences and phrases than to require explanations of single words by definitions or synonyms. The circular mentions "Robinson Crusoe" as one of the reading books for schools authorized by the department.

A number of physicians and other citizens of Boston have united in a circular addressed to the teachers of that city, urging them to use all their influence and authority to suppress the use of tobacco among the children in their schools. There is no doubt that this habit is becoming more and more prevalent among children, to whom it is equally certain to be injurious. The makers of cheap cigarettes are largely responsible for this condition of affairs, which is attracting much anxious consideration on both sides of the Atlantic.
